Twins reunited in Ontario

Brother and sister apart since they were babies

Nancy Beasley always wanted a brother to take her to the park.

After 25 years of waiting, she finally got her wish Saturday.

Nancy and a long-lost twin brother, David Richaud of Fresno, were reunited at her Ontario home for the first time since both were babies.

One of the first things they did after meeting was head for the nearest park for a swing.

"It's unbelievable," exclaimed the 26-year-old mother of three children as she gazed upon her real-life brother.

"It sure is nice," he said.

Until two years ago, Mrs. Beasley had no idea she had a twin brother, or any brothers for that matter.

She had been adopted at a very young age and knew little about her past. She was told her mother had died shortly after her birth and that her father had been a drunkard.

"I was never told I had any brothers," Mrs. Beasley recalled.

David, however, knew who his real parents were and knew there had been five children in the family. All had been adopted by different foster-parents, though, and he did not know where his brothers and twin sister were.

Nancy and David were the youngest of five children born to Albert E. Martin Jr. and Elise Klien Martin, a New England man and his French war bride.

Albert and Elise had met in war-torn Nancy, France towards the end of World War II. He was a handsomely-built U.S. serviceman, she a typically petite 19-year-old French girl.

After a short romance, they married. After the war they returned to the U.S. with a son, Jack, born in 1946.

Soon, two more sons were born, followed in 1950 with the birth of the twins.

Eight months after David (born Nicky Martin) and Nancy were delivered, Elise Martin died of leukemia in a Brunswick, Maine hospital.

"I was told our father wanted to put us in an orphanage so he could visit us and get us back when he could. But then he felt if he placed us in good homes we'd get a better upbringing than in an orphanage," Mrs. Beasley said.

Albert tried his best to keep the family together, but the task was too much for him. Over a period of four years all of the children were put up for adoption.

Nancy was adopted by an Albuquerque, N.M., couple, Paul and Peggy O'Leary, who never knew the identity of her real parents.

As Nancy grew older she decided to satisfy her childhood curiosity about her real family tree. With the help of the Adoptees Liberty Movement Association (ALMA), she discovered who her godparents were.

It was when she telephoned them she got the shock of her life.

Fireman dies in engine crash

Headed for fire when car slams into Montclair rig; 6 others hurt

By JON MORRIS
PB Staff Writer

One Montclair fireman was killed and six other persons injured including three firemen when a car unaccountably slammed into a fire truck at a Montclair intersection Saturday night.

Fire engineer Robert Anderson was fatally injured in the accident at Ramona and Holt Avenues at 7 p.m., according to Montclair Police Lt. Clyde Graham.

Graham said the fire truck, headed for a trash fire, had its siren on as it drove westbound on Holt Avenue. The driver of a Thunderbird, northbound on Ramona, rammed into the left rear of the truck, causing the fire engine to swerve out of control, jump a curb and ram into a car going eastbound on Holt.

Barre Robert Mormann, 21, of 2060 Cypress St., Ontario, driver of the car, was booked at West End Jail on suspicion of manslaughter. He was being held on $5,000 bail, according to deputies.

Graham said there was a passenger in the Mormann car and a woman driver of the auto hit by the truck as it swerved. They were taken to Doctors' Hospital but the extent of their injuries were unknown.

The other firemen injured — Capt. John Pruiksma, Don Crouch and Christopher Alten — were all taken to Doctors Hospital. Pruiksma was reported in serious condition, and the other two apparently escaped major injuries.

Graham said the woman was pinned in her car for an hour while rescue personnel tried to free her. The fire truck, meanwhile, landed on its top in the eastbound lanes of Holt and traffic was rerouted in the area.

Firemen had to turn the truck on its side to get Anderson and the other firemen out.

"It's the worst tragedy the city's had in the five years I've been with the city," said Mike Milhiser, assistant city administrator, who was at the scene of the accident.

Laurie Page, a Montclair administrative assistant, noted it was the second Montclair fireman killed in one week. Tom Liskey was fatally injured in the crash of a private plane Wednesday in Orange County.

All traffic was held up at the corner of Ramona and Holt for several hours Saturday evening while firemen tried to remove debris and get the truck righted. A crowd of curious onlookers on both sides of Holt watched the rescue operations.

CAR FLATTENED

This car, driven by an unidentified woman, was one of two cars involved in a collision with a fire truck at the corner of Holt and Ramona avenues in Montclair Saturday night. One fireman died and six other persons were hurt including three firemen.

Paraplegic pulled from burning home

A crippled Montclair man was pulled from his burning home by neighbors early Saturday morning before the arrival of fire rescue vehicles.

Gordon Stamps, his wife and two children were aroused by neighbors about 3:45 a.m. at their home, 10186 Bolton Ave. before it was totally destroyed by fire.

Montclair fire officials said Stamps, a paraplegic, was rescued from the burning home, but suffered burns over 21 per cent of his body. He was treated at Montclair Doctors Hospital and later transferred to a burn facility in Orange County.

Firefighters said the home, on a residential street in the city, was totally involved in flame upon their arrival. Though no surrounding buildings were damaged, said firefighters, the Stamps' residence was a total loss.

Fire officials said the cause of the fire and exact amount of loss remained unknown Saturday night, but did say the fire appeared to have started in one of the home's bedrooms.

Units from both Montclair stations responded.

Officer shoots driver in struggle

A 27-year-old Ontario man was listed in critical condition Saturday night at Ontario Community Hospital after being shot in a struggle with an Ontario police officer who had issued him a traffic citation.

Police said Charles D. Cotton was stopped in De Anza Park Saturday afternoon about 4:15 p.m. by officer Gerald Burger and was cited for a traffic violation. After issuing the citation, Burger requested a warrant check on the driver of the vehicle and learned that Cotton had an outstanding traffic warrant.

Police said that when Burger attempted to handcuff Cotton prior to bringing him in for booking, a struggle broke out between the two men. During the fight, Cotton grabbed Burger's gun away from the officer and pointed it at him. Burger, however, kept the gun from being discharged by holding his hand on the cylinder of the pistol.

Burger then was able to regain control of the gun and, as the fight continued, shot Cotton in the chest and arm.

Police said there was no reason known yet for Cotton's resistance other than his desire to avoid incarceration.

Burger was treated for minor lacerations and abrasions at San Antonio Community Hospital and released.

Koreans hand over bodies, survivor

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — North Korea on Saturday released the copilot and the bodies of three other crewmen of a U.S. helicopter shot down over Communist territory three days ago. The prompt release underscored efforts by both sides not to let the incident lead to a confrontation.

Observers said they could not recall the North Koreans acting so quickly in the past to return American survivors or remains.

President Carter welcomed the release but said through a spokesman in Washington, D.C., that he "deplored the loss of life and the excessive reaction to an unarmed and inadvertent intrusion."

The transfer began as wooden coffins containing the bodies of three dead American servicemen were brought by North Korean army trucks to a spot just outside the conference center in Panmunjom.

The Pentagon identified the dead as CWO Joseph A. Miles, 26, the pilot of the downed helicopter; Sgt. Robert C. Haynes, 29, of Anniston, Ala.; and Sgt. Ron Wells, 22, of El Paso, Tex.

U.S. Army Col. Terrence McClain and several soldiers of the 19th Aviation Battalion, the unit to which the downed chopper was assigned, were over to identify the bodies.

Then an eight-man U.N. detail carried the coffins one by one and handed them over to an American honor guard on the demarcation line. The guard draped the caskets with American flags and put them into waiting ambulances.

Col. McClain went back across the demarcation line and escorted back the sole survivor of Thursday's incident, Warrant Officer Glenn M. Schwanke, 28, of Spring Green, Wis. Schwanke had arrived by car and walked unaided across the demarcation line.

He looked tired and shaken, but his only visible injuries were a bruise under the chin and scratches on his face. North Koreans had first reported Schwanke was wounded. His

Aftermath of blackout

New York court, prison systems close to chaos

NEW YORK (AP) — As the temperature soared to a record-matching 98 degrees, New York's prison and court systems came close to chaos Saturday. Officials feared the troubles caused by coping with blackout-related arrests could spark yet another crisis.

Meanwhile, Police Commissioner Michael Codd ordered an extra 1,500 uniformed policemen to join the 2,500 already working Saturday night to quell any outbreaks on streets already littered with the evidence of looting during the blackout that began Wednesday night.

Following the largest mass arrest in New York City's history, jails and holding pens in the court houses in four boroughs remained jammed as a volunteer army of judges, prosecutors and Legal Aid Society lawyers struggled with the aftermath of the billion dollar blackout.

Most of the 3,521 persons arrested in the looting which came while the city was blacked out Wednesday and Thursday were still being held. Not until Saturday afternoon was there any movement in arraignment procedures. Authorities then began pairing suspects with their fingerprints and police records.

At the Bronx County Court House, 360 prisoners were jammed into a single detention pen for the third sweltering day.

The only place to sleep was the floor. There were diabetics deprived of insulin, officials said, persons undergoing methadone treatment going into withdrawal, persons suffering from epileptic seizures and heat prostration.

Officials estimated it would be Tuesday at the earliest before all those arrested will see a judge.

"It's a nightmare; it's inhumane; we admit it, but we can't do anything about it," said Philip Leshin, a spokesman for the Corrections Department.

While the courts struggled to deal with the persons arrested for looting, arson and related crimes, federal, state and city officials tried to get the stricken city back to life.

Consolidated Edison, the utility which failed, announced it was implementing new measures which it hoped would overcome the problems which combined to leave the city dark for 25 hours.

Con Ed President Arthur Hauspurg said the company was taking steps immediately in areas which "may have contributed in some way to the shutdown of the system Wednesday night or delayed its restoration."

As part of a plan to prevent a recurrence, Hauspurg said Con Ed would, among other things, improve its storm watch capability. Lightning was among the causes of the blackout.

He also said the utility would increase the use of in-city generating capacity, staff normally unmanned substations and gas turbines around the clock, and staff auxiliary generators at its major substations to provide standby light and power.

The city's Economic Development Administration reported it had received about 800 phone calls from businessmen who told of $20 million in damage caused by looting, arson and food spoilage.

Projected onto the estimated 2,000 wounded businesses, that would mean damage of $50 million or more.

Deputy Mayor Osborn Elliott said between 85 and 90 per cent of the businessmen reporting losses said they would rebuild if they received federal loans.

Mayor Abraham D. Beame conferred Saturday afternoon with Bronx businessmen who had suffered looting or arson damage.

A group of 20 area congressmen took a day-long tour of shattered sections of Brooklyn along wth Woodie Williams, New York director of the Small Business Administration.

Williams pledged that the SBA, which has declared New York and Westchester County disaster areas, would speed loans of up to $500,000 to help owners of gutted, looted businesses get on their feet again. It normally takes up to a year to arrange such assistance.

However, this time some of the estimated 2,000 businesses wracked by the violence said they would not reopen. Others said they would.

Pair rapes Pomona woman

A 33-year-old Pomona woman was raped and robbed by two men who at first offered to help her when her car broke down, police said.

Officer Arthur Espejo said the woman was having car problems in a drive-in dairy's parking lot on south East End Avenue in Pomona late Friday night.

The two men approached her and offered their assistance. Later, they forced her into their auto at knifepoint, according to Espejo. She was driven to an unknown Pomona residence and raped by both men.

Espejo said the men ordered her to disrobe and also attempted acts of sexual perversion. She was later robbed of $10 by the men.

The victim was dropped off at a corner in southeast Pomona by the men, who then fled. One was described as a male Latin, about 35 years old, 5-7, 190 pounds. Police had very little description of the second man.

Carter abortion stand ires women in administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the highest-ranking women in the Carter administration, described as "outraged, angered and disappointed" at the President's opposition to federal funding for elective abortions, are preparing a memo for Carter in hopes of changing his position.

Administration sources said the planned memo resulted from a 90-minute White House meeting Friday afternoon attended by nearly 40 women and three men, all Carter appointees or their aides.

The memo, which will be circulated Monday for signatures of those who attended, will include a list of medical instances where the protesters think poor women should be able to receive government money for abortions. One reason cited will be a pregnant woman's exposure to German measles, long associated with serious birth defects.

The women plan to pose a number of questions for Carter, such as:

—What should a poor woman do if she knew her baby would be born deformed?

—Should a 14-year-old girl be forced to raise an unwanted child?

One of those who attended the meeting, convened by Carter's top-ranking woman, Margaret "Midge" Costanza, said that when Carter was informed of the meeting the previous day, he indicated he would not change his position.

One woman, who asked that she not be identified, said of Carter: "It's so disappointing. We knew during the campaign that he opposed abortion, but it sounds like his position is getting stronger. Now he's saying not only that he opposes them, but that he won't permit them."

The issue came up because of two Supreme Court decisions earlier this year opening the way for states and the federal government to cut off Medicaid funds used to finance abortions for poor women. Medicaid programs paid for abortions last year for about 300,000 poor women.

Carter told the news conference that the Supreme Court's rulings were "reasonably fair." But the women were particularly incensed by his statement that: "As you know, there are many things in life that are not fair, that wealthy people can afford and poor people can't."

Fire damages Chino carport

Chino firefighters were summoned to a carport fire Saturday afternoon at the Adobe Spring Valley condominiums west of the intersection of Ramona and Chino Avenues.

Responding to the 4:30 p.m. alarm, firefighters found most of the fire extinguished by residents who had used a garden hose.

Cause of the fire was determined to be a juvenile playing with matches. Chino fire officials estimated the loss at about $500.

Mobile home gutted by fire; hydrant dry

An overloaded electrical circuit led to the destruction of an Ontario mobile home Saturday afternoon after firemen were unable to obtain water from a fire hydrant maintained by the mobile home park.

Ontario firefighters said the mobile home of Douglas Fleetwood, 1855 E. Riverside Dr. was totally involved in flame when they arrived following a 2:23 p.m. alarm. Officials from Ontario station three at Parco and Francis Streets said the fire apparently resulted from an overloaded electrical socket where a window air conditioner had been installed. Officials said the socket was wired with aluminum wire.

Fleetwood, said officials, was watching television when he went to the bedroom and first noticed the smoke and flames. He summoned firefighters, but was forced from the residence by the smoke and heat.

Firefighters said that when they attached their hoses to a hydrant near the mobile home park, the hydrant was dry. Officials said the hydrant is maintained by the mobile home park.

Officials said they could not speculate on whether the dry hydrant would have had any impact on the eventual outcome of the fire, but said they would investigate the situation further. One Chino unit was called to the scene to lay down additional hose from another hydrant.

One firefighter was treated for smoke inhalation at the scene and returned to duty.

Loss to the structure was calculated at $7,000 with the loss to contents estimated at $4,000.

Grassroots movement is battling 'big' government

TRIM seeking tax reform immediately

By PHYLLIS CANNON
Asst. City Editor

There is a grassroots, citizen movement in the 35th Congressional District fighting high taxes and big government.

It is the newly formed Pomona-San Gabriel Valley Chapter of the nationwide organization, Tax Reform Immediately (TRIM).

The 35th Congressional District includes Pomona, Claremont, La Verne, Walnut, Covina, West Covina, Ontario, Montclair, Upland and Chino.

Lee Fisher of Covina is chapter chairman.

"We seek as members all Americans who share our alarm at higher taxes, larger deficits and greater inflation," said Fisher.

"More and more Americans realize they are being taxed to the breaking point. We know we can't expect the politicans and bureaucrats to solve these problems. They are the ones who created them!"

TRIM's objectives, Fisher explained, include opposing any increases in taxation at federal or state levels; supporting legislation for lower taxes; and "perhaps most important of all," insisting on a reduction in the size, power and cost of government.

Instead of just talking about it, Fisher continued, TRIM plans a regular action mailing program to comment on proposed legislation and to suggest specific steps to implement its slogan, "Lower Taxes Through Less Government."

In addition, TRIM will distribute literature, host educational meetings and supply speakers for interested groups.

Regular chapter meetings are held the first Wednesday of each month at 8 p.m. at the American Opinion Bookstore, 118 W. Bedillo St., Covina. Anyone interested may attend.

TRIM seeks sponsors among business and professional groups willing to have their names used in connection with organizational objectives and to make small financial pledges to pay costs of materials.

Serving on the executive committee with Fisher are Ruth Hill of Covina, secretary-treasurer; Frank Scudder of Claremont, program chairman; and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Carroll and Dorothy Higginbotham, all of Alta Loma, publicity committee.

Among those already enlisted as sponsors are John M. Eagle, Ralph Ellsworth, Ted Mitchell, Adrian Sheldon and Dr. James R. Privitera, all residents of the 35th Congressional District.

Fisher said TRIM chapters are active in nearly half the congressional districts in the country.

North Koreans

mother, Patricia Schwanke, said in Wisconsin she had been informed by the Army that her son's only injury was a bruised right knee and cuts on the leg.

The official North Korean news agency, in a broadcast monitored in Tokyo, said Schwanke made a public apology at the city of Kaesong, about five miles north of the Panmunjom truce village, five hours before his release.

Schwanke promised not to intrude into North Korean territory again and told reporters he received medical aid and generally was well treated during his captivity, the broadcast said.

The report quoted Schwanke as saying the other three crew members would be alive if they had not tried to escape North Korean troops.

Schwanke and the dead were taken to a U.N. Command advance camp 1.2 miles south of the truce village and were flown from there to a military hospital in Seoul.

The North Koreans refused to return the CH47 Chinook helicopter, saying it was destroyed and they did not want it used for anti-Communist propaganda.

About 200 soldiers from both sides and journalists watched the proceedings in silence.

Refugees to U.S. allowed

NEW YORK (AP) — President Carter has approved a recommendation to grant 15,000 Indochinese refugees emergency admission into the United States, CBS News and the New York Times reported Friday.

Most of the refugees now are stranded in Thailand and in Southeast Asia. Some still are on vessels that were used to escape from Vietnam.

The network and the newspaper quoted informed sources as saying the president made his final decision Friday, endorsing a proposal made by the State Department about two weeks ago.

The next step will be for the attorney general to study the matter.

Twins reunited

"They went hysterical on the phone. They kept screaming, 'there were two of you baptized! There were two of you!' That's when I discovered I had a twin brother," said Mrs. Beasley.

She was also sadly informed that her real father had died several years earlier.

"I had mixed emotions. There was sadness that I had lost my father again before I had found him. But at the same time I discovered I had four new brothers," she said.

Mrs. Beasley easily contacted her three oldest brothers. Her twin was the hardest to find.

David had been adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Robichaud who now live in Fresno. The couple had personally known David and Nancy's real parents.

It was through a quirk of fate that David and Nancy located each other.

Mr. and Mrs. Robichaud returned to Brunswick, Maine, in June to see if they could locate any of David's missing siblings. After talking with relatives they discovered that Nancy had been found.

The twins started corresponding and David decided to come to Ontario to visit. They reminisced over old photographs and letters they have both collected about their real family.

One letter, mailed recently from an aunt perhaps said it all, "War was a terrible, ugly thing for your mom and dad. Both had their fill of it. Then they had a nice little family they were only allowed to enjoy for such a short time. No it wasn't fair to them . . . or to you children, but that's life."

Medicaid kickbacks: it's tough to curb fraud in health care

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Kickbacks are a way of life in Medicaid" despite attempts to curb fraud in the government's health care program for the elderly, the Senate Committee on Aging reported Saturday.

Although a 1972 law sets specific penalties for abuses, few cases have been prosecuted and only one led to a conviction, the study said.

The law makes soliciting, paying or receiving kickbacks punishable by a year in jail, a $10,000 fine or both.

The panel recommended that the offenses be made felonies instead of misdemeanors for both the Medicare and Medicaid programs. Legislation strengthening the sanctions is under consideration in Congress.

Medicaid, a state-administered program, paid $15.5 billion for health services in fiscal year 1975 for the aged, blind and disabled. About 28 million Americans are eligible to have 50 to 78 per cent of the cost of their health care paid through this program.

The committee report is the result of eight years of investigation. Previous reports have dealt with specific problem areas.

"The evidence is overwhelming that many pharmacists are required to pay kickbacks to nursing home operators as a precondition of obtaining a nursing home's business," the report said.

Some pharmacists elso pay rebates to the operators of clinics which serve urban areas and to hospitals specializing in welfare patients, the committee found.

Clinical laboratories which hope to do business with certain nursing homes also are required to make special payments. The committee said this practice has led to a consolidation of the laboratory business so that 16 laboratories control 70 per cent of New York state's Medicaid business, 12 control 60 per cent of New Jersey's business and 12 control 65 per cent of Illinois' business.

The report cited evidence collected by a special prosecutor for New York's nursing homes. Vendors and suppliers of meat, linen and laundry service, produce, groceries, and medical supplies make under-the-table payments regularly to retain nursing home business, this evidence shows.

Not all kickbacks are cash transactions. The committee's own investigations found that some pharmacists paid the salaries of certain nursing home employes. Others made gifts of large quantities of green stamps, new cars, color televisions, boats, desks and prepaid vacations.

Some nursing homes have required pharmacists to furnish supplies like mineral oil, aspirin, gauze pads and tape without charge, the report said, and others charged pharmacists rent for storage space.

Surveys of pharmacists in several states showed that they believed Medicaid abuses were widespread.

The report said that prosecutions have been so few because kickback cases are among the most complicated and difficult to prove. Prosecutors have said they cannot justify spending the staff hours and money required to win a case that will lead only to a misdemeanor conviction.

The committee called for stepped up anti-fraud activity by the Justice Department and the Internal Revenue Service and more federal assistance for states to hire their own auditors and investigators.

Sens. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman and ranking minority member of the Aging Committee, sent copies of the report to the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means and Commerce Committees. They indicated their support for the proposed stiffer penalties.

Racial battle at Folsom

FOLSOM (AP) — A battle between black and white inmates in the maximum-security section of Folsom Prison Saturday was broken up by guards who fired 10 shots, prison officials said.

At least four inmates were hit by buckshot that scattered from beanbags fired into the ground or at the prisoners, said associate warden Stewart Potter. He said none was seriously hurt.

Later in the day, an inmate, Robert Moore, 38, was stabbed in the abdomen outside his cell in the prison's normal-security area. Potter said Moore, who is serving an armed robbery sentence from Butte County, was hospitalized but is expected to recover. He said the assailant hasn't been found.

Potter said he didn't know whether the incidents were related. But acting warden Joe Campoy ordered inmates locked in their cells 25 minutes after the stabbing, about 1½ hours earlier than the usual lockup, Potter said.

He said the fight, involving eight black and eight white inmates, was the biggest racial battle in his six years at the prison, and may have been prompted by clashes at San Quentin earlier in the week that left three inmates dead.

Extra guards were called in after the fight to keep watch on the prison's non-security units in hopes of avoiding trouble there, Potter said.

Youth, 15, struck by friend's car

A 15-year-old Alta Loma youth was injured Saturday afternoon when he was accidentally struck by a friend's car following a baseball game.

Foothill District fire officials said Dean DeStefani, 9212 Base Line Rd. was taken to San Antonio Community Hospital for treatment of a broken leg and abrasions following the 2 p.m. accident at the corner of Opal and Lemon Streets in Alta Loma.

Officials were unclear as to how the accident occurred, but said DeStefani apparently was thrown on to the hood of the car and broke the windshield.

Officials at the hospital refused to comment on DeStefani's condition.

Guerrilla executed

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — The government said Friday it had executed black nationalist Robert Bhebe, convicted of promoting guerrilla warfare against the white minority regime by encouraging blacks to leave the country for guerrilla training.

The Justice Ministry said Bhebe, who lost an appeal last month, was hanged Wednesday. It said he was a provincial secretary for the black nationalist group led by Joshua Nkomo.

Oke-e-e Poke-e-e

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Big success has eluded bricklayer John Standberry Jr. through his songs, so he's invented a dance he calls Oke-e-e Poke-e-e.

"There was a dance way back called the hokey pokey," he said. "This is a little bit similar but has a lot of modern steps."

Standberry, whose recording of his song about the new dance will be released about the end of the month, crooned a couple of bars in his tenor voice: "I know I can do the Oke-e-e Poke-e-e. Would you like to do the Oke-e-e Poke-e-e?"

Standberry says Elvis Presley was a truck driver when he walked into a studio and recorded a demonstration record, so there's no reason a bricklayer can't get to the top.

Even if financial success never arrives, Standberry said, he's getting self-satisfaction from his music.

Share and share alike

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — An oil man offered to donate a share in a well to Rocky Mountain College if the staff could think of a way to make money on it.

The staff did. They're going to raffle the share, which amounts to one-eighth of one per cent of the well.

Terry Mattison, college vice president in charge of development, said anyone who has donated at least $100 to the college in the past year can, for $1, put his name in the hat for the drawing on the well share.

"If this well hits and produces similarly to others, the winner's share should produce $150 a month for maybe 10 years," Mattison said.

Pomona to share funds

Council session planned

Federal revenue sharing funds totalling $200,000 will be divided by the Pomona City Council among community-based agencies Monday night.

A large portion of the federal funds, some $88,000, is already designated for the Pomona Valley Juvenile Diversion Project. Other programs being considered for funding include the YMCA Outreach program, Pomona Boys' Club, YWCA and a senior citizens-handicapped transportation program.

Other agenda items for the 8 p.m. meeting include council review of a request from William J. McKnight to be allowed to develop a 120-bed board and care facility for mentally disabled persons at 2018 N. Garey Ave.

The Planning Commission earlier denied McKnight's application for a permit and he is appealing to the council for a reversal of that decision.

Another hearing will pertain to the proposed vacation of a street: Bluegrass Place between Phillips Drive and Wright Street in the Westmont area.

Residents in the area are trying to prevent the street from being constructed. It would connect Westmont with the planned Pardee housing development.

Annual 'Oakie picnic slated in San Dimas

A large percentage of the population of the small, rural community of Vinson, Okla., will hold an "Oakie" picnic today in San Dimas Park.

They now are residents of the valley, and this event will be their third annual "Oakie" picnic.

Picnic chairman Jim Odom is planning a day of "visiting, looking at pictures of one another's grandchildren and talking about whose been home last," according to one picnic goer, Nell Smith Ogle, Pomona.

When the former Vinson residents began their picnic here in 1975, 25 persons attend. Last year attendance grew to 50. This year, Mrs. Ogle said, they are expecting between 50 and 100.

"Word of mouth does it," she explained.

Families bring food which is served potluck. Activities begin about 11 a.m. and last until everyone is talked out.

"We get together mostly just to visit," said Mrs. Ogle.

Mayonnaise

One tablespoon of mayonnaise has more calories than a medium-sized banana.

Kids' treasure hunt is slated

This is "Treasure Week" at the Upland Recreation Department. Treasure hunts will be held at four areas during the week for elementary school aged children.

The treasure hunts will be held on Monday from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at Magnolia Park, Tuesday from 1 to 3:30 p.m. at Cabrillo School, Wednesday from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at Citrus Park and Thursday from 1 to 3:30 p.m. at Foothill Knolls School.

Master plan studied

The Upland City Council will consider adoption of a master plan for the 11th Street Park site at its 7 p.m. meeting Monday in the City Hall.

The 20-acre park is located between Mountain and Benson avenues and has been considered as the location for soccer and football fields.

Just under 15 acres of the park site was purchased last fall from the Upland School District for $225,000. The other five acres had already been designated as a community park.

Related grant authorizations for the park will also be considered by the council.

Eldridge Cleaver: a ghetto firebrand preaching gospel

EDITOR'S NOTE: The return of Huey P. Newton, a former Black Panther party leader, from exile in Cuba brings to mind the return from exile of another party leader, Eldridge Cleaver. The man who once preached against his country now embraces it.

* * *

"America is truly a disgusting burden upon this planet, a burden for all humanity." — Eldridge Cleaver, 1968.

* * *

"With all its faults, the American political system is the freest and most democratic in the world," Eldridge Cleaver, 1977.

By TONY LEDWELL
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — "I wanted to send waves of consternation through the white race," he wrote in "Soul on Ice," his 1968 book. "I know that if I had not been apprehended, I would have slit some white throats."

Today, he renounces those words, "but they were honest at the time." When he goes on trial on charges of attempted murder, he will be flanked by three attorneys — all white.

At 41, Eldridge Leroy Cleaver says he finally knows who he is. The ghetto-bred firebrand—whose thundering rhetoric once exhorted masses of angry young men to arms and scared the wits out of others—now speaks gently to well-dressed audiences, preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Occasionally, the former White House "dirty tricks" political operative, Charles Colson, is at his side. They proclaim themselves "brothers in Christ" and talk of their past contempt for each other, their religious conversions and their new devotions.

Cleaver spends his days lecturing and preaching, his trial in limbo awaiting the outcome of legal maneuvers. Just this month, the California Court of Appeals turned down Cleaver's request for access to FBI files on him.

After a nine-year stretch in prison for assault, Cleaver moved swiftly to the front ranks of the Black Panther party and almost died in a shootout with police in 1968.

That same year, he ran for president as the candidate of the Peace and Freedom party, seeking to dismantle many of the institutions he now embraces. He got more than 25,000 votes.

Within three weeks of the election, he was on the run, launching a seven-year exile to avoid arrest on charges stemming from the shootout. He wandered through Cuba, North Korea and North Vietnam, eventually settling in France.

The confusing portrait of a gun-rattling rebel turned spiritual pacifist and devout Christian triggers the inevitable question: Is Cleaver sincere or trying to win sympathy from potential jurors?

When he was released from jail on $100,000 bail last Aug. 13, he acknowledged that he was trying to win the trust of people, but because of his sharp personality change due to a profound religious experience, he also said it would be a long and arduous road.

When Cleaver returned, the Black Panthers called a news conference and suggested he had turned into an FBI informer. Later, the party toned down its rhetoric, saying it had no evidence.

Cleaver's wife of 10 years, Kathleen, says with a chuckle that all her once-bitter husband wants now is "to be an elder statesman."

For Cleaver, the revolution is on ice. Many of his friends died in the recurring war between the Panthers and the police.

Former comrade Huey Newton, exiled in Cuba for three years, recently decided to return to the United States, saying a changing political climate in the United States made possible a fair trial on the murder charges he faces.

But while Newton vows to resume the leadership of the Black Panther party and to expand its social programs, Cleaver says he wants to spend his remaining years as a writer, expounding on his social philosophy and explaining how religion changed his life. He has a contract to write a book on his personal spiritual revolution.

"I've studied carefully, and I agree with the teaching of Jesus, but I don't like the idea that I've been 'born again in my cell.' I'm certain that people would see that as some kind of opportunistic gambit on my part," he says.

Cleaver says his experiences in exile "led me to refresh my contact with the whole spiritual dimension. What I found was that my previous philosophy had an emptiness at the core.

"I came to see that there is a fundamental mistake contained in the Marxist-Leninist ideologies, where they make the distinction between idealism and materialism. Everything dealing with the spirit or with religious subjects is lumped under 'idealism' and condemned. I came to feel that there is not only room but a necessity for us to address ourselves to morality and the relationship between people.

"So I was wrong, and the Black Panthers were wrong. We had a totally political and economic approach, without giving any consideration to the more civilizing influences.

"Our membership in the United States is the supreme blue-chip stock, and the one we have to exercise," Cleaver now declares.

Cleaver is charged with three counts of attempted murder and three counts of assault with a deadly weapon on a police officer in the April 6, 1968, shooting with Oakland police.

Cleaver, coughing tear gas and with a bullet in his leg, survived the 90-minute gun battle. He contends he never fired a shot, nor even held a weapon. He said he hid in a basement.

To their neighbors, Eldridge and Kathleen Cleaver seem like any other middle-class couple, seeking solitude in the suburbs and enrolling their two children in a private school.

Mrs. Cleaver, 31, who once answered her front door with carbine in hand, now asks casual acquaintances where the best schools are. Her friends say she wants to involve herself in the school's PTA.

Cleaver, a chronicler of black frustration and symbol of a volatile era, is now a writer-husband-father. He depicts himself as a man without regrets.

High on hot air

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although not many are planning to go around the world in 80 days, hot air balloonists are growing in number. There are more than 1,500 licensed balloonists in some 40 countries, says National Geographic.

Although Roger Bacon theorized the possibility of using balloons for flight and although balloons have been used to carry mail, military observers and even fire bombs, ballooning has only become popular in the last 20 years.

The first balloon was devised by Joseph and Jnxues Montgolfier, who on June 4, 1783, filled a 33-foot bag with smoke and set it adrift 1,500 feet above Annonay, France.

With the introduction of lightweight nylon bags and small bottled gas burners for easier, faster inflation, ballooning for sport has taken off, says the Geographic.

Liquored lobster

Tagging lobsters for study is ineffective because the crustaceans shed their shell as they grow. When marine biologists in Canada proposed marking the lobster with numbers, a tattoo artist balked because of their fearsome claws. The lobsters were placed in buckets of water generously laced with alcohol then tattooed before they sobered up.

New Hampshire: what America once was

Where 'founding' fathers' virtues are still cherished

EDITOR'S NOTE: It's far from the glamorous sunbelt, and it's among the smallest of the 50 states. But New Hampshire is enjoying a heady growth of its own. Its governor says that's because New Hampshire today is still as America once was.

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) —By the thousands, people like the Dimonds, the Cagens and the Spears are moving into New Hampshire.

For Jim and Martha Dimond, it means living on one paycheck. For Bob and Linda Cagen, a new home. For Doug Spear, a new farm.

Little New Hampshire is the 11th fastest growing state in the United States, just under 2 per cent a year, and the second fastest growing east of the Mississippi — next to Florida.

Since 1960, its population has jumped from over 600,000 to more than 800,000, and it is still growing. State planners project that it will surpass one million by 1980.

The greatest share of the migration is from Massachusetts, its neighbor to the south — 38 per cent from 1965 until 1970, according to the latest census data available.

"New Hampshire is, as we say, what America was, all of the great virtues that our founding fathers believed in and worked hard for," says Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr.

The 65-year-old conservative Republican governor, himself a businessman transplant from Georgia and New York, has won three terms by keeping the state free of a general sales tax and income tax, balancing the budget with surpluses and luring 55 new industries since 1973 because of low taxes.

New Hampshire is the only state with neither a general sales nor income tax, a big attraction for tax-weary residents of Massachusetts, which has both — each 5 per cent.

Living is just less expensive in New Hampshire. State officials figure that $10,000 in wages give a New Hampshire wage earner up to $400 more in purchasing power than they'd have in neighboring states.

But there are drawbacks: Complaints of lack of services and of low pay.

Many migrants are attracted by lower priced homes and the rural lifestyle.

"We're able to live on one paycheck," says Martha Dimond, 27, who moved from West Acton, Mass., to Nashua. Her husband, a railroad employe, commutes 45 minutes to his job in Boston.

"In Massachusetts, both of us worked," Mrs. Dimond said. "We were just making it. We couldn't afford a home in Massachusetts and rented an apartment for $245 a month. We bought a home in Nashua because of the low property taxes. The city is loaded with things to do, and I'm really happy."

Doug Spear, 38, who owns a real estate brokerage firm in Nashua, moved from Massachusetts a few years ago. Here he found "a lot more house for your money and very little in the way of taxes.

"We wanted to buy an old farm. But there was no way we could afford to buy what we wanted in Massachusetts. We couldn't afford the taxes. We found that our savings in New Hampshire were equivalent to a 20 per cent gross raise in pay."

And Spear likes the lifestyle.

"The quality of life is different in New Hampshire. It is not as materialistic as the lifestyle in the suburbs of Boston. Five minutes away from your house, you can be off in the woods somewhere."

Linda Cagen, 34, and her husband, a salesman, moved to Nashua from Norristown, Pa.

"My family is in Boston and we wanted to be closer to them," Mrs. Cagen says. "We couldn't afford the taxes in Massachusetts. Property taxes are at least double there what they are here."

Mrs. Cagen is less enthusiastic about schools.

"I have a son who will be five and going to kindergarten," she says. "But I'll have to send him to a private one and pay for that. There is no public kindergarten."

Jim Hobson, executive director of the New Hampshire Education Association, a collective bargaining agent for teachers, says the state's teachers' salaries are among the lowest in the nation and that education in New Hampshire is "being starved out."

Hobson, who moved here from Flint, Mich., eight months ago contends that living costs in many parts of Michigan are similar to New Hampshire's "but teachers' salaries here are about 70 per cent of what they are in Michigan. Many teachers are working multiple jobs, from construction to waiters. A good many share housing. Most under 35 can't afford to buy."

Ed Brunelle, commissioner of education, says kindergartens are not required in New Hampshire schools, but about half the local systems have them, and he insists that New Hampshire "is in the forefront of the 50 states" in education.

New Hampshire ranks 49th among the states in aid to education, but Brunelle says the amount of money spent per pupil is the same as in neighboring Maine and Vermont.

"The only difference," he says, "is that New Hampshire has decided to pay it locally." This comes from property taxes in the town.

Low-cost housing units are scarce.

"There just isn't enough. Nobody is building low-cost housing," says James Archey, executive vice president of the Greater Nashua Chamber of Commerce.

According to Archey, Greater Nashua has doubled its population in the last 15 years, from 65,000 to 130,000.

Several small towns in southern New Hampshire, like Londonderry, whose population has risen from 2,000 to more than 10,000 since 1960, have passed ordinances to control growth. These limit the number of building permits developers can obtain.

"You can't stop growth, you need it," says Mrs. Joan Fogarty of the Londonderry Planning Board. "But it must be controlled. There are the normal problems, increases in school needs, police and fire departments. Taxes are going up every year. There must be a good balance between residential and industrial growth."

Many of the residents of southern New Hampshire, where the state's growth is concentrated, work in Massachusetts. They are still subject to that state's income tax. Some blue collar workers living in older housing on the

NEW HAMPSHIRE HOMESTEAD — Linda Cagen makes her way with son, Michael, 4, across unfinished yard of their new home in Nashua, N.H. The Cagen family found their home cost less and property taxes were lower than in nearby Massachusets. This fall, however, Michael will have to attend a private kindergarten because the local school system doesn't have one. A small price for the unfettered lifestyle the Cagens and others have found.

New Hampshire lifestyle—

Massachusetts side of the border commute to their jobs in Nashua. The city of Nashua imports 25 per cent of its labor force from Massachusetts.

According to 1974 figures from the Federal Bureau of Economic Analysis (the latest available) New Hampshire ranks 29th in the nation in per capita income.

Wages of production workers for manufacturing in New Hampshire are about $1 an hour below the national average. Production workers in the state were averaging $4.41 an hour in November 1976.

But the state ranks among the lowest in unemployment — 5 per cent for 1976 compared to the national average of 7.7 per cent.

And it is solvent, showing a surplus of $6.8 million in fiscal year 1976.

Much of New Hampshire's revenue comes from liquor stores run by the state, from dog and horse racing, sweepstakes lotteries and the rooms-and-meals tax.

Liquor revenues and a corporate income tax accounted for $60 million income during the fiscal year 1977, or about one-third of the state's general fund budget.

Gov. Thomson says liquor sales in 69 state stores provide the most revenue.

"Primarily I came here as a businessman and I couldn't see why a state shouldn't be operated like a business," Thomson says. "Mainly you stay within your anticipated revenue in handling expenditures for the state."

Thomson scoffs at complaints that the state has no general welfare program.

"We certainly have a welfare program that is costing us a little more than $200 million, the largest appropriation that we have in the budget," he says. "But we certainly are opposed to giving any tax dollars to welfare cheats and frauds and so we've been working to eliminate that from our program."

He acknowledges that both the state prison, 99 years old, and the state mental hospital have been neglected, but says they developed before he became governor.

He says he's tried hard to turn things around, and asked the legislature for funds for an architectural and engineering plan to build a modern prison.

Allocations have been substantially increased for the state mental institution and for education, he says.

Thomson says he welcomes growth and recalls an attorney once referring to him as a "growth freak" at a hearing.

"That sure describes me correctly," he says. "I wouldn't draw a fence around New Hampshire or raise a wall."

For the handicapped

Special devices help sculptors

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A small canvas bag filled with sand hangs from the ceiling on a pulley in the studio where Professor Norman Holen teaches sculpture at Augsburg College.

The apparatus was invented by Holen to enable Mike Mitchell, whose spinal cord was damaged in a 1974 automobile accident, to pursue his interest in sculpture.

A box in the studio holds special tools which can be attached to the left foot of Ray Kiel, a cerebral palsy victim who cannot control his hands, so Kiel can participate in the regular sculpture class.

Holen designed the tools specially for Mitchell and Kiel after he was asked if there was any way the two handicapped students might become involved in sculpture.

"They are a regular part of the class," Holen said. "I make all of the tools they use during my off time in my workshop at home. They enjoy the independence the tools give them and enjoy being treated like anybody else."

Kiel, 38, said he began painting water color landscapes about six years ago, holding a brush between his toes, and has sold several paintings.

"Because Ray had been painting with a brush between his toes, I thought I'd make a sculpture tool he could use between his toes," Holen said.

That first tool was a wooden knife, about five inches long, with toe grooves on each side of the handle.

When Kiel had mastered that tool, Holen designed a wooden sandal with leather straps that Kiel could wear on his left foot. The sandal included a wooden sculpture tool attached to the front.

"That worked so well, that I decided I ought to give him more variety," Holen said, "so I expanded the idea into a heavier foot tool with a hole in front that various wooden modeling tools fit into." The sandal has rubber on the bottom so Kiel can walk on it.

Kiel, who recently finished his second sculpture class and has developed considerable skill, said his favorite work thus far is a lifelike sculpture of a young horse.

"The tool is very comfortable—and was easy to use ... once he perfected it," Kiel said with a laugh as Holen gave him some suggestions on another project.

Holen, 39, who has taught at Augsburg for 13 years, said he began working on a tool for Mitchell in January.

Mitchell cannot use his legs or feet and his fingers don't work, but he has fair use of his arms and can use his shoulders.

To meet this challenge, Holen designed a weighted arm splint that hangs from the ceiling pulley with the sandbag equalizing the weight. The splint extends from Mitchell's elbow beyond his fingertips and is strapped to his arm. Tools like those which fit into the front of Kiel's foot sandal can be inserted into the front of the splint.

"The sandbag makes the equipment lighter for me to work with, and the knot in the rope keeps the bag from landing on my head if the rope breaks," Mitchell joked.

Holen, who said he has not patented any of his inventions for the handicapped artist yet because he can't afford it, already is looking ahead to a new challenge.

"This summer I want to design a tool that could be used by someone who can only move his head," Holen said. "I don't have a student with that problem yet, but I've worked out the problems and think it'll work rather well."

Japanese markets greeting 'sunrise'

HINOMISAKI, Japan (AP) — In this tiny fishing village, when the setting sun has turned the Sea of Japan into a shimmering carpet of coral, women and small children wade offshore with nets to catch sardines for their evening meal.

They toss the little silver fish onto the rocky shore, where they lie flopping and gasping until they are gathered into a wooden box.

On the horizon are hundreds of small fishing vessels which later will bring their catch to docks in nearby towns. The fish will be sorted at cooperatives and later sold to businesses in nearby towns, or frozen and flown to big cities.

The Japanese take about one-sixth of the world's fish catch from the teeming seas around them. They get more than 25 per cent of their protein from seafood.

On the Tokyo wharves, business at the Tsukiji Fish Market begins before dawn. Trucks arrive crammed with tuna, the big fish frozen and white with frost. Workmen pull them from trucks with wooden hooks and the fish clatter to the floor.

Other workers weigh each tuna on a scale that is wheeled up and down the docks. Tags showing the weight are stuck to the head of each fish and the tuna are then arranged in long, neat rows.

Tails of the fish are chopped off with big meat cleavers by workmen bare to the waist, their foreheads in sweat bands.

Buyers carrying clipboards walk along the rows, peering at the black backs and silver bellies.

Tuna are caught in ocean-going fleets but the market also deals in fish caught nearer to shore. In tanks of brine at Tsukiji are eels, flounder, bream, sardine, crab, clams, oysters and wriggling masses of small snake-like fish.

Octopi rolled into small balls about the size of an egg or medium sized, as a grapefruit, are in tanks or on metal trays. On the docks lie dead sharks, some six feet long.

More than 500 auctioneers begin ringing bells to gather buyers to the various auction stalls, where bids are recorded on clipboards.

Before the auctions are finished, the sun has risen and the shape of Tokyo's skyscrapers begin to appear in the distance.

Midwest exodus

Although the Midwest's industries remain strong, people have been moving out of the region. One reason is that productivity in the Midwest is increasing faster than the market for its goods. The result: jobs there pay more every year, but they are becoming relatively scarce.

MEMO

June 20, 1977

Dear Jim

In totaling your inventory for May 1977, I find a drastic increase over last year at this period.

Your inventory is much much to high. You need to reduce your inventory to maintain the proper balance of cash on hand.

In order to keep your selling prices as low as they have been and are now, you must raise additional cash to continue taking advantage of the manufactures discounts.

In purchasing for the 3 new stores you have over bought.

Due to soft market conditions our inventory has piled up.

It is my recommendation that you reduce your inventory by $35,000 to $40,000 immediately.

Sincerely
Linda Rehm

Profile: Jacqueline 'Jackie' Ossko

She's a bright, polished jewel with many facets

By PHYLLIS CANNON
Asst. City Editor

Jacqueline Annette "Jackie" Ossko could be called a jewel.

A bright, polished jewel with many facets, shadings, interests, abilities and opinions.

She's a happy individual with an easy, genuine laugh that spreads quickly to her eyes. She's friendly.

Best of all, though, she's involved; she contributes. She's a spirited fighter, an able leader, a hard worker. She's outspoken. Those with whom she works and associates are never in doubt about her positions.

Professionally, she is an educator. She is an administrator in the Pomona Adult School with the title of program assistant.

She supervises educational programs in hospital facilities for the adult school, as well as many community classes.

"I'm probably a 'token' on my job," she said. "There's nothing wrong with being a token. It's a privilege, in fact."

Regarding her work, she said adult education must change if it is to survive, and she describes it as the potential "rainbow of many colors and hues" which could revitalize Pomona "in an exciting way."

Adult education, she said, is a program "that really does help people, the one vehicle that could meld all elements of Pomona together.

"I'd like to see satellite campuses all over Pomona. Why not a campus at the empty market on North Garey Avenue and another in some of the vacant buildings on the mall?"

Mrs. Ossko has the educational background for her administrative postion. She holds masters degrees in school administration (Cal State Fullerton) and speech and English (Cal State Los Angeles) and is enrolled in the doctoral program at United States International University, San Diego, in human relations and educational leadership.

She joined the Pomona school district as a teacher in 1969.

She has many other interests.

She is into music as a vocalist, is a professional writer (Women's Home Companion and Ladies Home Journal) and at one time wrote a column for the Courier Journal in Louisville.

She's an ardent Democrat. She serves as Second Reader at the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Claremont.

Library offers aid to deaf

'Silent' world expanded

By ED PRATHER
PB Staff Writer

The world of the deaf is, by definition, silent. But that doesn't mean it has to be empty. At Pomona Public Library special programs are helping expand the world for those who cannot hear.

Backed by state grant funds, library personnel have learned sign language enabling them to communicate with deaf and hard of hearing patrons. A variety of programs have been designed for the deaf and special television equipment has been provided for their use.

"Our goal is to make the library as accessible to the deaf and the hearing impaired as anyone else," said Jackie McDougal, community services coordinator.

Pomona's library is one of 22 libraries around the state participating in a $107,000 state project to encourage opportunities for deaf people, said Mrs. McDougal.

Seven library staff members were trained in sign language last year, and weekly events for the deaf has resulted in an upsurge of deaf patrons.

She estimated 35 or 40 deaf and hearing impaired persons regularly use the library now. Before the special project began only 2 or 3 visited the library on a regular basis, although that can be misleading because deafness is an "invisible handicap."

In any event, the library's new patrons are very happy with the project.

"They're glad they have finally been discovered," said Mrs. McDougal.

Some of the services the library is offering to deaf people include a video recorder that is used to tape captioned and sign language broadcasts on public television. The tapes can then be viewed at the patron's convenience.

Captioned entertainment and educational films will soon be offered at the library.

And by plugging into a special telephone service of the Metropolitan Cooperative Library System, a whole range of special resources can be made available.

Pomona Public Library has discovered a special resource of its own in Mrs. Gail Alvarez Geyer of Pomona.

Deaf since birth, Mrs. Geyer has attended the only college for the deaf in the world, Gallaudet in Washington, D.C.

Now a behavioral sciences student at Cal Poly Pomona, Mrs. Geyer, 33, is enthused about the new services being offered for the deaf.

She becomes a storyteller at the library every Thursday morning, relating children's tales to anxious young faces. She even puts a puppet on her hand and it "speaks" in sign language.

"It (the special services) is real good for the children because it gives them an opportunity to learn," said Mrs. Geyer.

She said it is vital that deaf children, and adults, be exposed to books and learn to read.

Unfortunately in the past, she explained, many did not because it is very difficult to learn to read if you cannot hear.

"Most youngsters first learn reading by hearing nursery rhymes repeated to them with the words in front of them. You can't do that with a deaf child."

Because of the difficulty in learning to read, deaf youngsters usually fall behind their age group educationally, which often leads parents to overly shelter them from other life experiences and opportunities.

As a result, deaf adults often feel left out socially as well as educationally.

Times are changing, however, and projects like that being offered at the Pomona library are helping.

"Most are very determined to learn now," she said.

Mrs. Geyer said she is hopeful that the project and others can be expanded to reach the deaf who live in every community. She estimated that perhaps as many as 200 to 300 deaf persons live in Pomona.

She said there is no reason deaf persons, with the help of special programs, can't achieve success just as anyone else.

"The only problem deaf people have is that they can't hear," she said.

'The Fishin' Hole'

Young anglers may try 'luck'

The county is opening a new fishing hole west of Pomona this week and Supervisor Peter Schabarum is encouraging young fishermen to try their luck.

To be known as "The Fishin' Hole," the Walnut Creek Spreading Basin northwest of the intersection of the San Bernardino Freeway and Grand Avenue will be open Saturdays throughout the summer during the daylight hours.

Schabarum says the fish have come to age in the spreading grounds, and kids may now go after them without any fees.

Ordinarily the basin is used to collect water for perculation and storage. However, this year there is a considerable amount of mature fish in the water to make the sport enjoyable.

The basin is unimproved and has some hazards. However, the Los Angeles County Flood Control District will post signs alerting the young fishermen to the dangers. District crews also will be on hand to help cast a line or watch for problems.

Schabarum said the pond will remain open to the young sportsmen until the fish run out.

Survival is self-interest

In 1976 American corporations gave $2 billion to nonprofit institutions.

A goodly sum, but considering that 75 per cent of the nation's 1.9 million corporations made no contribution at all last year, the potential in corporate giving is a long way from being realized.

The head of one of the country's biggest corporations believes that industry needs to improve its performance with educational and public policy research institutions.

In these areas, according to Robert H. Malott, chairman of the board of the FMC Corp., businessmen have generally been lax in advancing their own self-interest.

On the contrary, he claims many have been unwittingly supporting institutions which are hostile to the free enterprise system.

Malott declares it is absurd for businessmen to give money to institutions which are undermining the basis on which the future of business depends.

Malott recommends that businessmen do four things to ensure that corporate giving supports their best interests:

1. They need to recognize that the prospects for private enterprise can be strengthened through pragmatic corporate donations.

2. They can move to establish self-interest criteria against which all requests for funds can be judged.

3. Managers of corporate philanthropy must seek out constructive institutions which may not yet have identified their company or foundation as a possible source of support.

4. Businessmen must constantly scrutinize the recipients of corporate funds by requiring reports on how the funds are being spent.

Businessmen can and should demand that their donations to higher education be used to help shape an economic environment that is more supportive of private enterprise.

Malott summarized the situation best: "To ensure that future donations are possible, the survival of free enterprise must be made certain."

Minimum wage penalizes teens

While President Carter and George Meany haggle over how high to raise the minimum wage, neither seems to have considered the possibility that the American people might not want it to be raised at all. In particular, they have failed to consult the opinions of those individuals who will be most seriously affected by any increase — our nation's teen-agers.

At the present time, teen-age unemployment is approximately 20 per cent overall. Among teen-age blacks the figure is twice as high. The reason behind both these statistics is the minimum wage.

Some years ago, economist Milton Friedman declared the minimum wage to be "the most anti-Negro law on the books." In support of this contention, Prof. Friedman observed that in the early 1950s the unemployment rate among male teen-agers was approximately the same for both blacks and whites — that is, approximately eight per cent. After the minimum wage was increased from 75 cents an hour to one dollar, however, the rate of black unemployment rose to between 20 and 25 per cent, while the rate of white unemployment rose to only about 13 per cent. From that day to this, Prof. Friedman has noted, the rate of unemployment among black teen-agers has been significantly higher than among their white contemporaries.

Increases in the minimum wage have served only to widen the gap it has opened between blacks and whites. Small wonder that so many young blacks find it to be an intolerable burden. Earlier this year, the Wall Street Journal interviewed a number of black teen-agers who said they would be happy to work for less than even the present minimum wage, if only the government would let them. The same article also conveyed a blunt "Drop dead!" message from a black social worker (herself the mother of teen-age children) to all those people who want to raise the minimum wage.

It is high time that the issue was squarely faced. The minimum wage is discriminatory; it is a protective tariff that highly paid union workers have thrown up around the labor market to prevent the young and the unskilled from competing with them for jobs. Not only does it insure that the unskilled worker will not be hired but, in the case of the poor and uneducated worker, it slams the door on his only chance to acquire marketable skills or job experience.

This is an outrageous situation for what is supposed to be the land of equal opportunity. If President Carter is really concerned about youth unemployment, he should direct his efforts not toward moderating George Meany's wage demands, but toward allowing our people to participate freely in our economic system. If the minimum wage cannot be repealed outright, it should at least be amended to exempt teen-agers. Such a move, it is certain, would do more to resolve the problem of youth unemployment than all the expensive and artificial make-work plans now being considered in Washington.

WASHINGTON (NEA) — The fate of a new Panama Canal treaty may depend upon President Carter's ability to persuade the Senate to tackle the politically ticklish pact before it adjourns for the year this fall.

Top administration officials are increasingly fearful that attempted ratification of the treaty may have to be postponed until January or February if Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd continues to insist upon adjourning the Senate by Oct. 8.

And that, from the viewpoint of treaty advocates, spells nothing but trouble.

Carter and his foreign policy advisers have recognized all along that the Panama Canal is an explosive domestic political issue.

No matter how carefully qualified, any new treaty ceding U.S. control of the canal to Panama will face extremely rough going on Capitol Hill. To entrust such a pact to the tender mercies of Congress in an election year is an invitation to disaster.

Obtaining Senate ratification by the constitutionally required two-thirds margin of 67 votes will be difficult enough. Persuading the infinitely more volatile House to approve implementing legislation that will accompany the new treaty could be next to impossible in an election year.

U.S. and Panamanian negotiators are nearing final agreement on the outlines of a new treaty, although another month or so may be needed to nail down the fine print details. Congress will be in recess the entire month of August, which means it will be after Labor Day before a completed treaty could even be submitted to the Senate.

That would leave just five weeks for Senate consideration of the most controversial foreign treaty in years if Byrd sticks to his Oct. 8 adjournment target. And during that five-week period, the Senate will be debating and voting on Carter's energy program.

Thus far, Byrd has displayed little interest in taking up the Panama Canal treaty this year. "The Senate is not ready for the treaty even if the treaty is ready for the Senate," he reportedly has told associates.

State Department lobbyists concede they do not yet have enough votes in the Senate to ratify a new canal treaty. "If we had to take a vote today, cold, we couldn't get more than about 50 votes for it," one nose-counter said.

But treaty negotiators Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz, along with Gen. George Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Bernard W. Rogers have been patiently briefing small groups of senators on the contents and importance of the new treaty.

So far, the administration team has met with more than half the members of the Senate, and Capitol Hill sources say the briefings have been extremely effective. Gen. Brown's wholehearted support for the new treaty has been especially helpful, these sources said, since many congressional and public fears about the pact center on defense issues.

Nonetheless, said a Senate Foreign Relations Committee source, "the time pressures are just becoming excruciating at this point."

Carter and his strategists are preparing a concentrated campaign to drum up public support for a new Panama Canal treaty once the diplomatic negotiations have been concluded. They know it will be difficult to persuade members of Congress to vote for the pact as long as their constituents remain so emotionally opposed to it. But the true test of Carter's commitment to a treaty may lie in his willingness to lean on Byrd for speedy Senate action, even if that means annoying the powerful majority leader.

There is absolutely no compelling reason why the Senate must adjourn by Oct. 8, apart from Byrd's determination to keep to the timetable he outlined early this year.

If the president really considers a Panama Canal treaty vital to U.S. interests, he had best be prepared to fight for it now instead of risking an election year brawl over the proposed pact.

Jack Anderson and Les Whitten
Key to Communist power

WASHINGTON — The Communists will gain control of Italy and France in the 1980s by reversing their revolutionary role. Instead of upheaval, they will offer stability.

This is the prediction of intelligence experts, whose function is to anticipate developments in Europe. They also fear the rise of Communism in Italy and France will open the rest of Western Europe to a takeover. But they think the Western brand of Communism — "Eurocommunism," they call it — may turn out to be as offensive to the Soviet Union as it will be to the United States.

As they see it, the immediate goal of the Communists in Italy and France will be to infiltrate government and gain managerial experience. They will seek to keep their heads below the line of fire, leaving the exposed positions to the democratic leaders.

The Communists foresee chaotic times ahead in Europe. Their strategy, therefore, will be to provide efficient, responsible government at the lower levels while the democratic parties are rocked by trouble and scandal at the upper levels, the experts believe.

In short, the Communists hope to gain the confidence of the populace by dispelling their fear of disruptive change and Communist-style repression. As the people lose confidence in the democratic parties, meanwhile, the Communists expect the majority to turn to them.

Already, the Communists have made a backstage deal with the Christian Democrats in Italy to abstain on votes that might bring down the government. In return, some 6,000 Communists have been admitted into subordinate but key positions in government agencies and government-owned companies.

In France, the Communists have emphasized their independence from Moscow by criticizing Soviet human rights policies, although this is a sore issue with the Soviets. When Soviet ruler Leonid Brezhnev flew to Paris last week, incidentally, the French Communist leader, Georges Marchais, deliberately snubbed the titular leader of world Communism.

In Spain, the Communists have strived so hard to make their party respectable that they have embraced the monarchy of popular King Juan Carlos. This has earned them a strange new nickname — el Real Partido Comunista (The Royal Communist Party).

The Soviets have responded to these developments with growing alarm. Intelligence reports describe new pressures upon the European Communist parties to submit to Soviet influence and ideology. Clearly, the men in the Kremlin are uncomfortable with Eurocommunism.

Footnote: The United States, simultaneously, has relaxed its opposition to the Eurocommunists. The dire ultimatums of the past have been stopped; Washington no longer is threatening to withdraw its support if Communists are admitted to Western European governments. The Central Intelligence Agency has also stopped subsidizing anti-Communist politicians and newspapers in Europe.

LOYAL OPPOSITION — Since the Republicans laid down the controls of government, the leaders who dominated the headlines a year ago have moved quietly out of the spotlight. Our reporters, Larry Kraftowitz and Jane Winebrenner, have tracked many of them down to find out what they're doing and how they feel about their successors.

Gerald Ford, of course, has gone out to pasture in Palm Springs, Calif. He is growing restless with golf and is talking about a rematch with President Jimmy Carter in 1980. The former President, meanwhile, keeps in touch with his key aides.

For example, he frequently telephones his former staff chief, Richard Cheney, who is back with his old investment firm, Bradley, Woods and Company. Cheney said it was too early for Ford to make a political move. "He's not gonna jump one way or the other (now)," Cheney told us.

Another former White House insider, Robert Hartmann, also speaks to Ford regularly, although "I don't call him up every morning like I used to." Hartmann has received a two-year grant from Stanford University to write a book about the 25th Amendment and Ford's unique succession to power. Hartmann, incidentally, has no great quarrel with President Carter's domestic policies but questions whether the new president has the congressional support he will need.

The controversial, foot-in-mouth Earl Butz, former secretary of agriculture, is now lecturing around the country and teaching on an informal basis at Purdue University. Butz told us he isn't surprised at Carter's emphasis on budget balancing. "He has two hard-nosed, practical businessmen — (Budget Director) Bert Lance and (Treasury Secretary) Mike Blumenthal," said Butz. "They're practical men with their feet on the ground."

Another blunt-spoken Ford man, ex-Treasury Secretary William Simon, is now a senior advisor to the New York management consulting firm of Booz, Allen and Hamilton International. He described President Carter's energy policy as "extremely dangerous." The emphasis is on conservation; "it doesn't deal with production one iota," he said.

Simon also challenged Carter's economics. "President Carter said we need more capital formation," snorted Simon. "You don't do that by taxing business $30 billion for Social Security taxes. That's fuzzy thinking on his part."

Ford's former chief economic adviser, Alan Greenspan, now forecasts economic developments through his own firm, Townsend-Greenspan and company. According to Greenspan, Carter still hasn't won the confidence of the business community. "Carter has changed too often. They don't as yet trust his judgment."

MASS TRANSIT — President Carter seems to have lost his enthusiasm for mass transit, which he liked to talk about during the election campaign.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams announced there would be no new transit money at all until he could study the program for at least a year. But an alarmed Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., talked to him and arranged a quiet compromise.

Williams agreed to slash his transit bill from $11.4 billion to $5.8 billion, and Adams said he would support it. But now the White House is opposing the legislation.

"The Administration's view," states a private letter from the President's budget office, is that the bill "is premature, that it is not needed at this time."

After some backstage prompting from the White House, Adams also reversed himself again and came out against the bill. Williams has pushed the bill through the Senate anyway, but it is now bogged down in the House.

Until it passes, there will be no money for transit systems that are planned for Cincinnati, Houston, Los Angeles and San Diego. Improvements will also have to be postponed for the transit systems in Boston, Chicago and New York City.

WHO'S NEWS — A woman who quit World Airways in a huff has now charged its chairman with trying to force his sexual attentions on her. In one of the most colorful suits filed in federal court here in a long time, Bonnie A. Clark charged that World Chairman Edward Daley began with "a little pat on her derriere, without plaintiff's consent" and grew progressively insistent. She rebuffed him, left her job and is now suing for $3 million. Through his lawyer, Daley declined comment.

Joyce Hifler
Think on these things

We can actually worry ourselves sick about what we can or cannot do for another person. No matter what our capabilities are, we cannot spend every moment directing traffic for someone else's life. And we should remember this when we start thinking of what other people should do for us.

It is very painful to stand by and see our efforts misused — to see what we've tried to do turned into shambles. But that's life and we do not condemn ourselves for trying, nor can we blame the other person for not having the awareness to use carefully those things made available. If love and caring remain in the midst of the chaos — then all is not lost. The trying continues — and hopefully, some time the light will reveal itself.

Thought

"I loathe my life; I will give free utterance to my complaint; I will speak in the bitterness of my soul." — Job 10:1.

"We exaggerate misfortune and happiness alike. We are never either so wretched or so happy as we say we are." — Honore de Balzac, French novelist.

Paul Harvey
Want a beautiful baby?

You can look around any classroom and confirm that we are not created equal.

To "equal rights" we are entitled.

But "equality," of course, there is no such thing.

Increasingly, however, we are discovering many of the factors which make us different, one from another, are controllable before conception.

The grade-schoolers you see in school — or in the theater matinee — more than any generation heretofore — wear glasses.

This may not relate to the prenatal condition of the mother.

But it may.

We are learning that women who take drugs during pregnancy — even sleeping pills — affect the enzyme activity in the developing fetus, impairing proper growth of the tiny organs. Including the brain.

There is some evidence that a father who smokes before conception may handicap the subsequent offspring. Certainly, mothers who smoke during pregnancy jeopardize the oxygen supply to the brain cells of the unborn. Massive doses of carbon monoxide can be fatal to the fetus.

Similarly, there is increasing evidence that drinking — by either parent — may have a subtle but deliterious effect on the offspring.

So you want to have a "beautiful baby." There are some specific rules you can follow. They begin with the selection of a mate.

Sensitive and controversial as the subject of heredity may be, sociobiology is now an established science.

Sociobiology relates inherited genes with subsequent behavior.

It theorizes that aggression, altruism, even homosexuality are among traits which can be transmitted genetically.

Generations of scientists have carefully bred race horses — even pet dogs — to perpetuate the best characteristics of the parents.

But up to now we have treated the human species with such indifference as to imagine that the selection of parents — and prenatal influences — don't matter.

In the royal family of Britain there is a tendency to porphyria, a hereditary metabolic disease which may have driven George Third to madness.

Prince Charles recognizes the latest research on this subject and accepts his own vulnerability. He has indicated that he will choose a mate "very carefully."

After the selection of a healthy mate who had healthy parents, what can one do to give the offspring every physical advantage?

Desist from the use of tobacco and alcohol and drugs of any kind altogether for six months prior to conception and, for the mother, throughout pregnancy. Stay off the Pill for six weeks prior to conception

A balanced diet during pregnancy is preferable to any extreme diet. Avoid excessive consumption of caffein, sugar, white flour, fried foods.

Mother, during pregnancy, should avoid sedatives, aspirin and allergy drugs. And, unless urgently required, avoid all X-ray. Avoid long periods in smoke-filled rooms.

Exercise during pregnancy flushes every organ, including those of the fetus, with fresh oxygen, but exercise should not be more strenuous than that to which the mother is accustomed.

Isn't it interesting — those newest recommendations based on the latest research include little that's newer than what grandmother knew by heart.

Ann Landers

On protection of children

Dear Ann: Child abuse and hideous murders of children are on the increase. The newspapers are sickening these days. I know you want to do everything you can to protect all young people. May I make a suggestion, Ann?

Early in 1975 you printed my "Ten Commandments for Protection of Children." Will you run it again — this time with the admonition that the column be clipped and posted wherever young people gather?

Thank you, Ann. — Sanuel Roen, Orlando, Florida

Dear Samuel Roen: Your timing couldn't have been better. I am pleased to do a rerun of your "Ten Commandments." Here they are:

PRACTICE THE BUDDY SYSTEM: There is safety in numbers. Children should be in the company of other children or adults at all times.

RAPPORT: Intimate rapport should be developed between parents and their children. Children who are uncomfortable about discussing "personal" subjects with their parents are especially vulnerable because they don't have the facts. It is also wise for parents to develop friendships with the parents of their children's friends so they can keep in touch and check on what their kids are doing together.

OBSERVANCE: Every child should be taught to be observant of everything — the unusual, the suspicious, the strange man who hangs around the schoolyard or playground, the strange vehicle. Children should be taught to note descriptions of people, vehicles, license plates and even to carry a pad and pencil so they can make accurate notes.

TEACH HOME SECURITY: Children should be trained to keep the doors locked at all times. No caller should be admitted when parents are absent. (The Boston Strangler gained admittance to 13 homes without force and murdered 13 women.) No information such as "My parents aren't home" should be given over the phone to unknowns. An excuse such as "My father or mother cannot come to the phone" should end the conversation.

EFFECTIVE PHYSICAL ACTIONS: Every parent should instruct every child as to what he should do in emergency situations. (Run for help — get to a phone, etc.)

COOPERATE WITH THE POLICE: Police should be consulted immediately when any suspicious event occurs. No neighbor, relative or friend should be shielded. All obscene phone calls, Peeping Toms, exhibitionists and "offers" should be reported.

TRAVEL PRECAUTIONS: Use well-lighted traffic areas. Keep car doors locked and windows closed. In case of emergency try to reach a police station or a busy or populated area. If this is not possible, remain in your locked car and hold down the horn until you attract attention and help.

INSTRUCT ABOUT STRANGERS: Warn your children never to accept a gift or a ride from strangers. And tell them never to allow a stranger to get close enough so they can be snatched.

OTHER PROTECTION: Know where your children are going and ask them to phone you when they get there. If they decide at the last moment to go to another place, make sure they let you know so you'll be informed of their whereabouts at all times. Also set a time for them to come home. Open-end social arrangements leave too many openings for getting into trouble.

NO HITCH-HIKING: Too often tragedy rides with the child who hitches a ride. Make it a firm, unbreakable rule — no hitch-hiking.

Once turned on, tough to quiet

DEAR DR. MILLER: When my ex-wife moved out, she took her yacky Siamese with her. It was such a relief. That cat talked all the time, and between the two of them it was just too much. Since then I've got myself a nice, quiet, domestic shorthair cat who's grown up to be well, actually, too quiet. I really wish Boots, here, would be a little more expressive. She hardly ever talks. How could I encourage her? — N.F.

DEAR N.F.: You could acquire another catty conversationalist, but Boots will likely respond directly to you if you talk to her. Remember, though, once you've turned her on, turning her off may be even more difficult.

DEAR DR. MILLER: How would red-tailed sharks get along with hatchet fish? They're all I have in the tank right now. — B.E.

DEAR B.E.: They should be quite compatible. Since the hatchets are lovers of the tank's upper strata, and the red-tailed shark is low down bottom feeder, it's unlikely they'll get in each other's way.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Do snakes get such a thing as blisters? If they do, I think my snake has some on his skin. If that's what it is, why would they be there? It couldn't be sunburn since Cynthia hasn't had any yet. — B.E.

DEAR B.E.: There could indeed be blisters on Cynthia snake's skin. Not from sunshine, in any case, gut, most likely, as a result of too much moisture. Your local snake sympathizer, be he a veterinarian or, in some areas, a herpetologist, would probably advise treatment of the affected skin areas and a change in Cynthia's surroundings, primarily a reduction of humidity.

DEAR DR. MILLER: On our two long-weekend trips, dog Debbie has come up with runny stools. We've heard a change of water can cause this. Should we take along some of our own water for her on future trips? — G.P.

DEAR G.P.: Carrying a canine canteen from home could be worth a try since a change of water is one possible cause of Debbie's diarrhea. However, it could also be caused by differences in diet, garbage or plants consumed, or other factors, including excitement. Debbie's doctor can advise on procedures to minimize a possible recurrence, and may have you packing a pooch prescription to prevent any recurrence.

Eavesdropping on small fry

I didn't mean to eavesdrop, but the conversation was just too good to pass up. A group of kids were talking around our kitchen table and one of them said, "Every time my Mom says, 'I'm doing this because I love you,' I know it's going to be something rotten."

"Yeah, doesn't love ever feel good?" asked another boy.

"Are you kidding? Love at our house is never being able to sit down for a week."

"How do you get them to stop loving you do what you want to do?"

"The one that always gets me is, 'This is going to hurt me worse than it hurts you.' They're lying. Did you ever see a parent depressed when you're cutting the grass?"

"Hey, I got one," said another kid. "How about, 'When you grow up, you'll thank me for being so strict.'"

"That's a good one," said his friend. "Can't you see your Mom looking at her calendar and saying, 'Hey, today is Tuesday, I've got to go over and thank Grandma for giving me a rap when I spoiled my dinner by eating two cookies back in 1946.'"

"Parents sure are funny," said another boy. "I love it when my Dad says, 'Son, I may not always understand you, but I am always willing to listen.' He says that just before he says, 'I don't want to hear anymore. Go to your room!'"

"You know the phrase that really turns 'em out is when you tell 'em everyone else's mother says yes and you get . . . (the whole table in unison) 'I'M NOT EVERYONE ELSE'S MOTHER!'"

"Where do they get these phrases?"

"Maybe there's a book of them that the hospital passes out on the day you take a baby home from the hospital . . . Wise Sayings for Parents."

"Do you suppose mothers really have that extra power they say they do? The one about, 'No matter where you are or what you're doing . . . I'll know.'"

They thought about that one for awhile, then one said, "Probably not, but who wants to take a chance on it?"

The conversation turned to Saturday night and one of them said, "Let's crash Kathy Krupp's party."

"If our parents knew they'd kill us."

"We won't tell 'em."

"That's sneaky and that's dishonest."

"No, that's sparing them . . . and that's love."

Dr. Lamb

A drug for skin cancer?

DEAR DR. LAMB — We read in one of your columns about a medicine that would cure skin cancers. I meant to save the column but it got misplaced. My husband has some places on his neck and face and would like to have the name of the medicine.

DEAR READER — There is no medicine for skin cancers that you can use yourself. Any suspicious spots should be examined by a doctor.

You may be thinking of my reference to salves containing 5-fluorouracil (5-FU). These can be used to treat actinic keratosis, the sun spots that can become skin cancer. This is a prescription item too. Some areas of the skin may already be undergoing changes before they can be detected by the human eye. This medicine will also attack these.

To help you clarify the problems of skin cancer and the pre-cancerous lesions I am sending you The Health Letter number 7-10, Your Skin: Sun, Aging, Spots and Cancer. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing to P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. It will also give you some tips on the role of the sun in causing skin cancers and measures a person like your husband should take to avoid skin cancers.

Your husband could benefit from protecting himself from the sun all year around with sun screens. Such measures also help prevent aging of the skin.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would like some information on hysterectomies. I had surgery eight weeks ago and I know nothing about what to expect. I would like to know what changes this makes in your body. I still have my tubes and ovaries. I'm 25 years old.

DEAR READER — There is a lot of general confusion about this because the public does not separate the difference between having your uterus removed and also having the ovaries removed.

The uterus simply responds to the cyclical stimulation of the ovaries. It is not a source of female hormones at all. The only change you will or should note is the absence of menstruation — but you will still have a cycle — and the inability to get pregnant. I don't know why you had a hysterectomy at such a young age and the cause for this might be important.

When the ovaries are left intact and are not damaged by the surgery they should continue normal functioning. It is sometimes difficult to do a hysterectomy without damaging the blood supply to the ovaries which can cause them to degenerate. But if they are undamaged you will still ovulate. The free ova will be absorbed from your body cavity and can never be fertilized. Your hormonal changes in relation to your cycle will continue. That means the mood changes, fluid retention or whatever happens to be your nature will still be there until the ovaries undergo involution as they do in other women when the menopause occurs. If your ovaries are normal you will not need hormone replacement or anything like that.

Particularly in young women, if the ovaries are also removed for any reason it is often necessary to provide female hormone substitution or replacement.

(Because of the volume of mail Dr. Lamb cannot answer your letters personally but he will answer representative letters of general interest in his column.)

Ward off a head cold with a cry

A medical researcher thinks you can ward off an oncoming head cold by crying. Emotional conflict is what triggers that cold, says this savant. Your nose expects tears. If you don't cry, the nose becomes congested, waiting for tears. I've always believed that emotions cause colds, asthma, arthritis, tuberculosis and cancer, but nobody has ever paid me a dime for the explanation, and the victims of the serious ailments don't welcome a tactless layman's whims, understandably.

Q "Whereabouts in the U.S. have the most criminals hiden out from the law?"

A. Probably the Arizona strip. It's a 140-mile-by-80-mile stretch of wasteland north of the Colorado River to the Utah line. Red mesas. Mesquite. Spectacular mountains. Empty valleys. No paved roads. No phones. No electric lines. No piped water. Outlaws, draft dodgers, bootleggers, rustlers, some of the FBI's most wanted, these by the hundreds have holed up in the strip.

CAR MECHANICS

Car mechanics have at hand a book called the flat rate manual. Comes out annually. And lists all standard repairs with the length of time they take to complete. If you gripe about your bill, the mechanic can whip out the manual and show the labor estimate, right there in black and white. Interesting. But an automotive expert tells me that any mechanic worth having around can do the job in half the time that's printed in that manual. And most mechanics do it in half the time, too.

A cheetah in the wild tends to feed about half the scavengers in its area. You can't say that of the leopard or the lion. They have retractable claws, so can defend their kills. The cheetah doesn't. And as you know, the cheetah is far faster than any of them. It's as though nature designed it that way. The cheetah can catch just about anything, then eat and run, leaving some, thus feeding not just one but a lot of animals. The cheetah is the only predator that doesn't roar much, incidentally.

Love eases child's trauma

By R. CLIFF WATERS
Marriage and Family Counselor

Seven-year-old Bobby sat and looked out the window. His big, round eyes, rimmed with shadows, seemed all the larger set in fields of sun-darkened freckles. He blinked back tears.

"This morning I remembered again. I remember that morning I got up and went into my mommy's room and the lamp was broken on the floor and there was a big hole punched in the wall," he said in a quiet voice. Bobby began to rock back and forth on the edge of his chair. "Mommy told me she and Daddy had a big fight, and he went away." A quaver in his voice seemed a signal for him to stop rocking. He turned to me, pulled his legs up under him cross-legged, and rubbed his knuckles hard into his nose.

"I thought it was my fault," Bobby said.

"Why did you think that?" I asked.

He was silent for a few seconds. "I was bad that day," he finally said, his voice almost a whisper. "I didn't clean up my room."

Bobby's parents are divorcing. Bobby is a member of a large group of children — now one in three in this country — destined to be raised by only one natural parent.

Most children whose parents divorce cope pretty well. Their grades in school may take a nose dive. Some will have sleeping problems. Grumpiness, temper tantrums and daydreaming may trouble many. But for the most part, these youngsters will pull out of it and adjust.

Parents assume rightly that divorce is a traumatic experience for the young. Where closeness and affection exist between the parents and child, the tearing away of one parent is less frightening and hurtful. Children who have love cope well, for love is the greatest shock absorber of all.

Bobby, like all children whose parents are separating, needs to know what his parents are troubled about. It is a mistake to try and hide what's going on from children. By informing the child, you take away the danger of his blaming himself.

It is also important to avoid disparaging the other parent. A part of the child's self-esteem is attached to each parent. He feels a need for the love of both parents.

Divorce is as traumatic for children as it is for adults. Children have much difficulty talking about what they consider "bad" feelings. They can use some help, whether they seem to need it or not, in getting these feelings out and accepted. Encourage the child, in the family group setting, to face the divorce trauma. Let him know that he is not to blame, and get on with the growing, sharing and building of life.

Opening lead — Q♥

By OSWALD and JAMES JACOBY

Edgar Kaplan and Norman Kay have long been one of the best pairs. Their style is marked by good steady common sense tactics that frequently become really brilliant.

Edgar's queen of hearts opening was normal. South played low from dummy whereupon Norman overtook his partner's queen with the king in order to shift to the seven of clubs. He led his highest club so that Edgar would not play him for a club honor.

South rose with the ace, led his last heart to dummy's ace, ruffed a heart and led a diamond. Edgar was ready with the second key defensive play. He played his jack of diamonds. Dummy's king won the trick and Norman played his 10 spot to tell Edgar where the nine was.

Now declarer's goose was cooked. He tried his best by playing ace and another spade. But Edgar took his king, led a low diamond to Norman's nine and was sure to make his queen of clubs for the set.

Note that if Norman had not put his king of hearts on Edgar's queen or if Edgar had risen with the ace on the first diamond lead, Edgar would have been end-played and the hand would have been made.

The bidding has been opened to his right with one spade. He has doubled for takeout, but his partner has left the double in.

This is easy. He should open his seven of spades in an effort to get as many trumps as possible out of play.

Mrs. Ossko supports the women's movement, but says she's not a women's libber. "My sons call me a women's lipper." They are Michael and Richard Borschel.

She has had "rare opportunities" to work with "marvelous women. Eleanor Roosevelt was a guest professor in my freshman speech class at the University of Iowa. I studied voice with Lotte Lehmann and coached with Marian Anderson. Great ladies. Great people.

"Women have never meant to threaten men. There's room in God's universe for all of us. Wouldn't it be a lovely world if no one wore a tag — young, old, black, white, smart, dumb?" she asked.

Mrs. Ossko would like to see more woman-to-woman support in the professions "and I try to encourage that," she said.

"I've lived in 16 states, almost an education in itself. My southern experiences left me breathless with admiration for southern women. I'm from the midwest where life is blunt. I never did learn to bat my eyes and whisper cute sighs of praise to my male counterparts. I'm more the Marjorie Main-Erma Bombeck type. Diapers, cesspools, carpools, night duty — that's my speed.

"Have you ever noticed," asked Mrs. Ossko, "that if a man in administration is strong, he's admired and called a leader? Let a woman administrator be strong and she's called abrasive.

Old inn is part of Ohio history

LEBANON, Ohio (AP) — For people who have a thing about eating where history's elite ate and sleeping where some of history's noted figures slept, the Golden Lamb Inn offers opportunity for both.

Those who indulge in such activities, should take heed of what history's elite had to say when they stayed at Ohio's oldest inn, which opened in 1803.

Take the English novelist Charles Dickens for example. The stage coach ride to this Southwestern Ohio community may have been bumpy for he had little good to say in his "American Notes" about the Golden Lamb.

"We dine soon after with the boarders in the house, and have nothing to drink but tea and coffee," Dickens wrote. "As they are both very bad and the water is worse, I ask for brandy; but it is a temperance hotel and spirits were not to be had for love or money."

Dickens was not the only famous guest at the inn. A local newspaper, which has been in business nearly as long as the inn, gathered a good deal of its biggest news by having a reporter hang around the inn and wait for the arrival of William Henry Harrison, in 1840; Martin Van Burrn, in 1842, Rutherford B. Hayes, in 1867 and Ulysses S. Grant, in 1883.

William Howard Taft came here in 1898, Warren Harding arrived in 1914 and according to the proprietors, James Garfield and William McKinley liked the establishment so well they came several times.

Service, admits present manager Jackson Reynolds, was not the only reason for such a distinguished clientele.

"You must remember that in the early 1800s, we were a major city," said Reynolds. "Lebanon was an important stop on the carriage route which led around the mountains."

After people began using the water canals, the town simply stopped growing. The man who had a great deal to do with the growth of the canal system, DeWitt Clinton, was also a guest at the Golden Lamb.

In the 100 years starting in 1825, the town grew at a snail's pace, and the only hint of revitalization came when the railroad was introduced in the late 1800s.

The town currently has about 9,000 population and prides itself on its rural appearance.

The Shakers, a religious group with strict moral standards, once lived in the area and may have been responsible for the town's temperance pledge. Even though their physical presence is missing, the inn keeps a few rooms as showplaces of Shaker furniture and crafts and Shaker pegboards decorate many of the dining areas.

Continuing the traditional concept of inns, the Golden Lamb offers more than just a place to eat.

There are 19 guest rooms available, all with antique furniture of one kind or another.

All the rooms are named for one of the inn's noted guests, although all of the guests did not necessarily stay in the rooms that are named for them.

The most spectacularly decorated room is the "Charles Dickens" room, which features a wood frame bed with an enormous headboard.

The room is rarely used and is open for display.

Those who use the inn for sleeping are advised to keep their rooms closed to keep out those who are trying to walk off their lunch or dinner.

Several of the rooms have their own particular history, such as the room where Henry Clay's sister died, or the room where a noted lawyer of the period, Clement Vallan-digham, died after shooting himself accidentally while demonstrating a move he planned to make in court.

'Topless' cars are created by torch

LIMA, Ohio (AP) — Dick Barker uses a cutting torch to prolong America's love affair with the convertible automobile.

He was well into the business of making convertibles out of hard top cars when the major auto manufacturers had to quit making soft topped luxury cars last year because of a new federal law.

It takes Baker only about 20 minutes to surgery with a cutting torch to rip the lid off a $13,000 1977 Cadillac.

"In a week it'll be a convertible ready to deliver," said Baker, 43, working in his shop surrounded by an auto wrecking firm.

Baker said "GM was thinking of me" when it made frame and chassis components of the 1977 Cadillac Eldorado the same as those of the 1976 convertibles.

He uses convertible mechanisms from wrecked late model cars in his work. He maintains contact with about 200 auto junk yards around the country for convertible parts.

Baker has modified 16 of the 1977 cars into convertibles so far. His prices range from $6,500 for the expensive Cadillacs to about $3,500 for some smaller models.

He expects to modify about 20 cars this year and feels his price is cheap because of the appreciation potential of 1977 convertibles.

"A new factory built 1976 Caddy convertible might bring $20,000 but one of mine has already been sold for over $30,000," he said.

Baker said he didn't know whether the 1977 Cadillac could be converted when it first came out and figured there was only one way to learn.

"I went out and bought me a $13,000 1977 Eldorado when they first came out last September and cut the top off," he said. "I'm not sure what I would have done with it if it wasn't possible to make a convert."

The big car convertibles were phased out because of federal safety requirements for turnover protection. Baker is exempted because the law applies only to production runs of more than 500 cars.

"The reason people want convertibles is because you can't get them any more," Baker said of his work. "It's as simple as that.

"Half of the people who buy these cars will never even put the tops down."

Heralds death of an era

Biographer recalls 'peak' years of Yiddish theater

NEW YORK (AP) — The death in 1920 of Jacob Adler, star of the Yiddish theater, marked for many the end of an era and heralded the death of that theater itself, believes Lulla Rosenfeld, Adler's granddaughter, whose book about her famed grandfather has just been published.

The world's admiration for this legendary actor was so great that an estimated 500,000 mourners filed past the coffin at the Hebrew Actors Club here, where the body lay in state for two days, Mrs. Rosenfeld recalled in an interview. Another 50,000 joined the funeral procession that wound through the streets of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

Mrs. Rosenfeld's book, "Bright Star of Exile: Jacob Adler and the Yiddish Theater," tells the story of the Yiddish stage, interweaving it with the threads of Adler's life. The author recalls her grandfather as having a "big image. His body had the balance of an acrobat."

Yiddish theater grew and prospered for decades, supplying for many the only comfort in otherwise desperate lives, Mrs. Rosenfeld said. It produced stars like Adler, his daughter, Stella Adler, Al Jolson and Paul Muni.

And it attracted as audiences Jewish immigrants of every class and background.

"Zionists, socialists, intellectuals, bankers, rich and poor, everyone came," she said. "They went away very full."

The New York-born Mrs. Rosenfeld, who made her own debut on the Yiddish stage at the age of 7, said the art owed much of its success to the strong ethnic identity it provided.

"It was their theater," she explained. "It spoke to them, it taught them and it scolded them. There was something very intimate in the language."

Adler left Russia in 1882, after the banning of Yiddish drama there, and came to the United States some years later. At the time, his granddaughter said, Yiddish theater here was primarily a series of songs and comedy sketches that often were criticized as being nothing but fluff — caricatures of Jewish life and culture.

But things began to change, with Adler's help, Mrs. Rosenfeld pointed out, and Yiddish drama entered into a new phase. Playhouses in this period of "beser teyater," or better theater, produced works written, for and about Jews. But they also brought to the stage — often for the first time — plays by such greats as Ibsen, Shaw, Tolstoy and Gorky, she said.

"The Yiddish theater brought to the masses the best of every world culture," Mrs. Rosenfeld said. "And it gave back to the world its own culture, its own tradition."

In their heyday, stars of Yiddish stage enjoyed almost universal recognition as artists, she said. Adler was paid $1,000 for each performance and he played in theaters from St. Louis to Sydney.

The actress-poet-writer blames the demise of Yiddish drama on the declining numbers of people who spoke the language. Immigration quotas imposed in 1922 cut off flow from Eastern Europe and each new generation of Americans lost a few of its ties to the old ways, she said.

There were some attempts to produce Yiddish plays in English in the hopes of attracting a larger audience, but Mrs. Rosenfeld said those attempts failed.

Now, Yiddish theater has all but died out as a popular art form, Mrs. Rosenfeld said, enjoying only an 11-week season in New York. But, she insists, it left its mark on American drama.

"In the theater of the '30s, '40s and '50s, there was a great deal of influence from the Yiddish theater," Mrs. Rosenfeld said. "It was the heroic but human image," created by actors like Jacob Adler that survived.

Mrs. Rosenfeld fears that in the ever-increasing homogeneity of modern life there is no room for such ethnic art, but she adds she hopes that's not true.

"The great beauty of any people comes from their specific culture," she said a little sadly. "The world would become very boring if everyone were the same."

Doctors treating 'people' problem

SEATTLE (AP) — The "space doctors" have been consulted to diagnose a disease affecting two firms' public plazas.

The symptom: not enough loiterers.

The Project for Public Spaces has "cured" several people problems in New York City in the past; one PPS success, Atlas Court at Rockefeller Center, is jammed by pedestrians at all hours of the day.

PPS has been called in to examine Seattle First National Bank Building's plaza and another at the new Federal Building.

Sea-First is anxious to turn its formal plaza into a pleasant public space. And Don Miles of Seattle, a cofounder of PPS, says he's curious to discover why, despite "heroic design efforts," the Federal Building plaza isn't used more.

PPS consultants have been dubbed the "space doctors" because they try to find out what makes one public space more attractive to pedestrians than others.

PPS says trees and benches aren't necessarily the answer.

Through the use of time-lapse photography, PPS examines traffic patterns within the space in question. Time-lapse telescopes hours of action into a few minutes and peak periods and social habits become apparent.

The firm spent several weeks recently photographing the Sea-First plaza and is now analyzing the results.

Miles doesn't know yet what the firm will find, but said the results so far have been surprising.

The filming technique was used with considerable success when analyzing the nonloitering problems of Atlas Court, said Miles and another cofounder, Robert Cook.

PPS film showed the courtyard was being used, but mostly during the lunch hour.

People leaned against the walls and some low placed signs. The planter ledge around the base of the Atlas statue was being used as a narrow and somewhat uncomfortable bench, Miles said. Planter foliage was being ruined.

Using this information PPS recommended redesigning the planter to include a bench. Railings were installed to accommodate the leaners and signs were raised.

"The impact was incredible," Miles said. Usage more than doubled and there no longer is an peak period.

"There's nothing worse than space designed for pedestrians with no pedestrians present," Cook added.

"It's a little like an empty church."

Floating spirits

Ancient Hawaiians believed canoes were built under the guidance of the gods. The vessel was regarded as possessing spiritual power and was welcomed by the people as a living member of the community. When a tree was about to fall, the priest shouted: "Now you are a tree. Soon you will be a man."

Jimmy's White House

President's vocabulary eclipses most others

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is causing problems for those who edit his public pronouncements for official publication. He uses unfamiliar words that send them to their dictionaries.

A veteran editor of the "Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents," published by the Office of the Federal Register, said in an interview that Carter's vocabulary eclipses that of any other president since the first issue came off the presses at the Government Printing Office in August 1965.

By her measure, Carter has a greater command of language than Lyndon B. Johnson, Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford. One can only speculate how she would have rated John F. Kennedy, who had an impressive way with words.

The editor, Margaret Donohue, credited Carter with eliminating one problem that was commonplace in some other administrations — finding an appropriate heading to place above each separate question-and-answer in news conference transcripts.

With some presidents, she related, there often was a tenuous relationship between questions and responses.

"Do you base the heading on the question that was asked or on the question that was answered?" she mused.

In Carter's case, she related, the response is usually closely related to the question, so there's no problem. Without mentioning names, she said some others seemed to prefer to respond to a question they wished they'd been asked, but weren't.

Reporters often found that to be the case with LBJ and, at times, Nixon.

The "Weekly Compilation" contains all of Carter's public remarks, selected documents such as messages to Congress, his daily schedule and a digest of White House announcements. Anyone can order a subscription from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, for $15 a year.

The publication is in the news now because, starting this month, it comes out in a smaller format — 9 ¾ by 6 ⅞ inches instead of 11 ⅛ by 8 ½.

There's a reason for the shrinkage, but not the one you might guess. The aim is to save type, not paper.

It seems that many of the items printed in the "Weekly Compilation" also appear in annual hardcover volumes of collected presidential papers. By having the page size of weekly issues match that of the books, the government saves a lot of typesetting.

It took Uncle Sam only 12 years to discover the fact.

Billion-dollar transportation aid

Rio finds 'new' subway can be a big headache

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Rio de Janeiro's subway is a billion-dollar transportation aid that sometimes seems like a billion-dollar disaster.

Its path is marked by mud, broken window panes, cracked walls and furious apartment dwellers who complain cement mixers, pile drivers and heavy machinery have made it impossible to sleep.

Officials estimate the subway will cost $1.1 billion by the time it is finished, it is hoped, in 1979. But some say nobody really knows the eventual figure.

"Human and material costs are absurdly higher than predicted," grumbled the Jornal do Brasil in an editorial. "Nobody knows how much it has cost and will cost."

Irritations have been so extensive that some people have retaliated by throwing tomatoes, rotten eggs and bottles from their apartment windows at the construction workers below. The unfortunate operator of one cement mixer missed three days of work when he was struck on the head by a cassava, one of Brazil's most popular vegetable products.

Technically, Rio is subject to a "law of silence" effective between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. But it is not uncommon to see heavy machinery rolling up and down a subway construction area at 4 a.m.

The subway's progress has been accompanied by cracking walls, ruptured sewage lines and frequent interruptions of water, gas, electric and telephone service as lines are accidentally cut.

Rio residents complain life in formerly pleasant, tree-shaded neighborhoods has been disrupted, or that front entrances to their apartment buildings have been blocked off. As the work progresses, they say they can no longer find places to park.

Neighbors in one area said they were severely inconvenienced when all four local supermarkets closed down. As streets are dug up and traffic to the area cut off, many stores have become stranded, losing business because customers find it too inconvenient to get to them.

The Alencar Glass Shop in Catete, however, reported a brisk increase in business when subway construction began to approach. In one two-week period it replaced 1,000 panes of glass in nearby windows.

He dropped out and retreated to Vermont

Big city 'executive' finds rural life is more fulfilling

LONDONDERRY, Vt. (AP) — Bob Hill burned with ambition. There it was, that glittering corporate world. His father pointed out the road to the top through sales and marketing.

Bob Hill took that road. His father was proud of him, and he was proud of that. Five major companies, 10 homes and 20 years later, Bob Hill began to wonder whether the anticipation of success wasn't more satisfying than success itself.

Here he was, age 44, a $50,000-a-year-plus vice president of the CBS Communication and Technology Group. He had an offer — at a six - figure salary — to head another firm as president. There were two Cadillacs in his garage, and his 25-foot boat could sleep five.

That was four years ago and Bob Hill realized he was at a crossroads.

"I asked myself, 'Do I want to keep challenging myself or spend the rest of my life enjoying my family and having fun?'

"I was tired of crawling on and off airplanes, the harassment and hassle. I had enough of board meetings and staff meetings and all that hoopla that goes with it."

So Robert P. Hill quit his job, turned down the new one, sold his Cadillacs, his boat and his Stamford, Conn., home. He packed up his wife of 21 years, Mary Jane, a former airline hostess, and his 14-year-old daughter Cathleen, and headed for Vermont's greenery and a new way of life.

But Hill didn't intend to retreat to the woods and live on nuts and berries. A rustic hardware store seemed a nice compromise between the need to make a living and a new, more carefree way of life.

After about a year, though, he found himself back in a sizable business again, as the New England distributor for Price's Candles of London. And he plans to set up similar distributorships in the rest of the United States.

Hill has been distributing candles from the basement of his hardware store, but he's giving up the store and plans to move into a 2,000 square-foot warehouse.

So is the dropout dropping back in? Not the way Hill sees it.

"I'm absolutely happier now even though I'm making less of everything. I'm independent, with nobody to answer to. The pressures you make in this business are your own."

He says he will be making one or two trips, but there is no way he will be traveling as much as he did. He, Mary Jane and Cathleen work as a family — just as hard as ever, sometimes seven days a week — but there are few separations.

"I'm with them all the time now," he says. "We're working and living together. My daughter works in the store, also. You don't even have to wear watches up here. You don't even look at the clock. You're your own boss. You set your own pace."

At times, the Hills simply close their store and do what they want. Signs have been posted on the door, "Watching the parade," "Going fishing," and "Went to the beach, see you tomorrow."

Customers?

"They'll wait, they'll be there tomorrow," says Hill.

"It's an easy life," says his wife. "I used to give a lot of formal dinner parties, but no more. I had enough of it. It's nice to get away from it. There are no social pressures here."

The Hills have lived in their modified log house, with four bedrooms, a living room, two baths and all the modern conveniences, longer than in any other home during their marriage.

It sits in this valley surrounded by three major ski slopes.

During the summer, the sliding doors of their cabin open onto a marble chip patio and two acres of wooded land. Not another house in sight.

A garden blooms with petunias, chrysanthemums and begonias. There is a bicycle trail leading from the back door through the woods. In the winter, it takes them to a pond for ice skating.

Instead of cocktail and dinner parties, there are backyard cookouts, badminton and croquet.

"The people are entirely different," says Hill. "A lot more is done on a handshake. There is a sense of security."

Hill is wearing a blue pullover sweater and jeans. Once he had closets full of suits and ties, but there is little need for them here. He seems in top shape and Mary Jane, also 48, is attractive and slim.

Why did Bob Hill wait so long to change?

"I hadn't reached where I wanted to go," he says. "I wasn't fully played out. You had to have it all. It is a part of corporate life. You make it, you spend it. We've enjoyed it but we've gone that route...

"I figure I gained. I came out a winner."

Individuality reigns in northernmost town

Hammerfest residents are still frolicking in land of midnight sun

EDITOR'S NOTE: On this day 188 years ago, the northernmost town in the world was incorporated. Few of the antiquities are left because the Germans leveled it during World War II. But there's a lot of pride and tradition — and a few quirks — among its 8,000 residents who are basking in the waning days of this year's midnight sun.

HAMMERFEST, Norway (AP) — The jail in this Arctic town that bills itself as the "northernmost In The World" has no beds, and the temperature in the cells is kept at a cozy 95 degrees (F). Guests sleep on the floor.

"That way, the drunks dry out quicker," observed Police Lt. Ralph Amundsen, driving between the high snow banks left by the rotary plow to point out a few other oddities about this tiny, modern town.

There was the old folks home where old sailors were given the big windowed rooms at the front so they'd never be out of sight of the sea, and the high school with three bullseye targets painted on the gymnasium wall so the kids would aim their snowballs away from the classroom windows.

On the bleak mountain, Amundsen indicated the floodlit ski run where the townsfolk could frolic during the "Moerketid," the dark time from Nov. 21 to Jan. 21 when the sun never shows its face. Beyond the frozen lake were Lapp pasture lands, where 12,000 reindeer migrate each spring to get away from the mosquitos inland.

Norwegians pride themselves on their individuality. Like not joining the Common Market and only partially participating in NATO. Their scattered towns in an age of urbanization and centralization are a reflection of this independent spirit. The small communities above the Arctic Circle are their particular joy.

Hammerfest, 250 miles above the Arctic Circle, was incorporated on July 17, 1789, when Washington, D.C., was just a swamp with a few scattered villages of Powhatan Indians Its latitude, as every tourist poster proclaims, is 70 degrees, 30 minutes, 48 seconds, the same as the northern tip of Alaska.

"We were the first town in Europe to have all our streets lit by electricity," said town engineer Olav Boe, citing an early example of Hammerfest's individuality. "Two of my predecessors brought the idea home from the Paris Exposition in 1889," the same one that featured Alexandre Eiffel's tower.

Now a town of 8,000, with the largest fish factory in the world employing some 800 young women, Hammerfest shows few signs of its proud antiquity, mainly because the Germans burned it to the ground, right down to the last telegraph pole, when they retreated from the Russians in 1944.

"They left only the little Lutheran Church standing because some of their dead lay buried in the graveyard," said Amundsen.

"Industria Hominum Naturam Vincit" — man's industry conquers nature — is the town motto proudly enscribed on the new town hall, but with typical Norwegian perversity the people have repudiated it.

"Now their main concern is protecting, not conquering, nature," says Stein Arne Bakken, a reporter of the Finmark Dagblad, the daily newspaper. He points to a student demonstration outside the town hall with signs that read in Norwegian: "No oil exploration above the 32 degree line."

"Test borings are about to begin," said Bakken. "People know oil development will bring more jobs, maybe prosperity, but they are afraid of the effect it will have on the fishing, on the environment, on the town itself when a lot of new people come in."

Polar bear pelts and stuffed bears adorn the town hall, but perversely the basement of the building is headquarters for the Royal and Ancient Polar Bear Society, dedicated to preserving the species.

The citizens of Hammerfest took great interest in the blizzards that buried Buffalo and other upstate New York communities this past winter. "The snow here begins in October and sometimes lasts till late May," said Boe. "We were fascinated with the plight of a city paralyzed by snow. I suppose we're always organized for it around here. We build up our roads and streets so the wind will blow the snow away, and we keep our plows running day and night."

Despite 60-mile-an-hour winds piling drifts 35 feet high, Hammerfest spends less than three per cent of its $5 million annual budget on snow removal. The town prides itself on keeping its airport and its 30 miles of streets and roads open all winter.

"People around here see the snow plows more often than our two police cars," said Amundsen.

Near noon the sun appeared over the mountain that the townsfolk call "The Thief," because it steals the precious sun for a few hours even in summer.

With the days lengthening and hurrying toward the promise of the midnight sun, which begins May 17 and lasts until July 28, the downtown streets were crowded with shoppers pushing wooden-runner sleds called "Sparks." A few Lapp families promenaded proudly in their bright-red, multi-layered tulip hats, and some drunken fishermen off a trawler that docked during the night called excitedly in a language that might have been Polish or Latvian to the girls coming out of the fish factory.

"Lots of foreign trawlers put in here," the lieutenant said, "but there are girls enough to go around so there aren't many fights."

The drug problem among school children has just hit Hammerfest, imported by the fishing fleets and the 100,000 tourists who come every summer to bask in the midnight sun.

"Surprisingly they have a hard drug problem at Soerver, an isolated fishing village of 300 people on the other side of the fiord," said journalist Bakken.

Norway, with 154 newspapers, ranks with Japan as one of the most literate countries in the world, and nowhere do people spend more time writing to the editor. The Dagblad runs a half-dozen letters a day.

"We are a very discussive people," admitted Bakken. "The readers are highly critical of everything the town does, and, of course, the politicians must have their chance to answer back. Such inviduality is part of our nature."

It's not for nothing that the mayor of a Norwegian town carries the title of "Ordfoerer" — leader of the words.

Print-buying for pleasure and profit

By NORMAN NADEL

NEW YORK (NEA) — Buy prints.

That's the good word as it has been for most of the past 20 years, for a steadily growing number of men and women — mostly but not necessarily young — who want to collect stimulating, satisfying, significant, original works of art without spending a millionaire's allowance on the project.

The key word is 'original," which means that the artist himself has done the creative work on the particular print that has captured your fancy. It will bear his signature, along with a number such as 63-100, which means you have the 63rd print out of a limited edition of 100.

Prints are not to be confused with reproductions or copies, which the artist probably has had little or nothing to do with, beyond creating the original work. Reproductions can be made by a variety of printing and photographic techniques, and are cheap. Actually, if a reproduction gives you pleasure, buy and enjoy it. But know it's not an original.

There are four basic graphic arts processes for producing prints: relief, intaglio, planagraphic (lithograph) and stencil (serigraph or silkscreen).

In relief, the artist cuts away unwanted areas of wood or linoleum, leaving a raised design which is inked and pressed against a suitable kind of paper.

Intaglio is the opposite. The design is cut or etched into a surface by one of several methods (etching, engraving, drypoint, mezzotint, aquatint). Ink is spread on, then wiped off, so that it remains only in the etched grooves. This is pressed onto paper or fabric.

Lithography prints whatever is drawn, usually with a greasy crayon, on a prepared surface; a flat stone or treated metal plate. The ink clings to the crayon but not to the dampened stone, and is transferred to the paper in a Litho press.

Silkscreen or serigraph is a stencil process. The artist uses a varnish-like substance to fill the mesh of tightly-stretched silk where he does not want to print, so the ink can pass through the untreated areas. There must be as many screens as there are colors, all perfectly registered on the final print.

And how much does a print cost? From about $20 up to about $1,000 when they are first published, depending on the obscurity or fame of the artist, and the number of prints in the particular limited edition. Once a print edition is sold out, copies can go into the $20,000 to $30,000 range, but that is rare; a Picasso, a Baque, a Toulouse-Lautrec, perhaps.

A Jasper Johns print, published in 1960 for $75, can bring above $4,000 today. Recent auction prices of prints at Sotheby Parke Bernet include a Picasso for $5,250, a Rauschenberg for $4,250.

A better index of value for a print is its importance to museums, especially when copies of the edition no longer are on the market. For example, Toulouse-Lautrec's "Partie de Campagne" from "L'Album d'estampes originales de la Gallerie Vollard" (1897), is a delicate, lovely scenic in yellow, pink, blue, beige and green. The lithograph edition was 100 prints, of which one each is in the Art Institute of Chicago, the Minneapolis Museum of Art, the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, and the National Gallery of Art in Washington.

With a popular painter, the increase can occur fast, as with American artist Fritz Scholder's "Indian in Paris." Published last October at $500 per print, it had increased to $1,000 by early spring when only a few of the edition of 100 were left, and since then, scarcity has driven the purchase value into the $5,000 range.

Most cities of any size have galleries that show and can get for you a variety of prints. An example here is Galerie Denise Rene, which like its two counterparts under the same name in Paris, not only sells but commissions original prints.

Coincidentally and significantly, a major New York exhibition this summer is "Impresario Ambroise Vollard" at the Museum of Modern Art. Starting about 1890, this Paris dealer and editor encouraged the then-little-known Post Impressionists to make prints in order to popularize their paintings, which weren't selling very well.

From then through succeeding decades he had a hand in discovering geniuses; notably Cezanne and Roualt. He also, through involving them in print-making, found a wider audience and appreciation for such as Bonnard, Chagall, Gauguin, Vuillard, Redon, Maillol, Matisse, Picasso (he published multiples in bronze of Maillol and Picasso sculptures).

While print-making is at least 500 years old, it was not really exploited as an original art medium before Vollard's time. Thereafter it declined until the late 1950s.

That was when June Wayne, generously funded for a 10-year-program by the Ford Foundation, designed the Tamarind project, to revive the art of lithography and to train artists and craftsmen in its use.

Since then, Tamarind, in Los Angeles, has trained a small army of master printers and brought them together with artists. Many have since established their own ateliers, so that lithography in the U.S. today is of major significance, even if Paris still has a corner on the process.

RENOIR LITHOGRAPH — "Pinning the Hat" (Le Chapeau Epingle) by Auguste Renoir illustrates the technique of lithography. The picture is drawn with grease pencil on a prepared stone or metal surface and transferred to paper. It is one of four printmaking techniques.

Chinese bronzes on exhibition

Four kinds of bronze vessels highlight "Republic of China: Chinese Culture in Focus," an exhibit being held through next April at the California Museum of Science and Industry, Exposition Park, Los Angeles.

Exquisite and refined examples of products of the Shang and Chou dynasties (18th-3rd Century B.C.), represent a Chinese cultural era known as "The Bronze Age."

Bronze objects, prominent in Chinese culture, were used as ritual vessels and musical instruments, matrimonial gifts, burial objects, and as facsimilies of awards or honors praising kings, nobles and high ranking officials.

Inscriptions on bronzes are among the earliest written documents giving insight into styles or forms of Chinese characters, sentence structures, and styles of writing of the Shang and Chou dynasties.

Pattern design and style of bronze often indicate more specific intent that mere decoration. For example, the t'ao t'ieh or monster pattern admonishes against greediness or evil; cloud and thunder patterns symbolize invocations for timely winds and rains creating a plentiful harvest; dragon and snake patterns allude to fertility and longevity.

Aussie rock is biggest

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Australia's Ayers Rock, at 2 miles long, 1½ miles wide, and 1,100 feet high, is the biggest in the world, reports the Rand McNally "Traveler's Almanac."

The rock was once known only to aborigines, who left galleries of cave paintings at its base. The gigantic stone is now a popular destination for tourists in the Outback.

According to federal officals

Government easy target for most 'outside' spies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials say some parts of the government are remarkably easy targets for outside spies such as the Scientologists allegedly planted in government jobs to steal confidential files.

"If they're qualified for a job and there's no arrest record, they can sort of swoop right in," said a Justice Department personnel officer.

Take the case of Gerald Wolfe. According to the FBI, the Church of Scientology planted Wolfe in a clerical job at the Internal Revenue Service so he could steal IRS documents on tax probes of the church.

The church also was accused of planting Sharon Thomas in a secretarial job at the Justice Department's tax division to steal files concerning investigations of the church and the government's strategy in fighting Scientologists' lawsuits.

Those cases were alleged in an FBI affidavit Friday to be part of a Scientology spy plot. The affidavit was made public as agents raided the church's two Los Angeles offices and its Washington office to recover hundreds of documents allegedly stolen from the government and to seize other evidence.

Church officials complained that the raids were "Gestapo" tactics to retaliate for 25 church lawsuits against the FBI and virtually all other federal law enforcement agencies.

The church also claimed the raids were an FBI attempt to silence church officials in their efforts to publicize an alleged narcotics trafficking ring operated by Interpol officials with the tacit consent of high-ranking U.S. and French authorities.

The FBI affidavit raises questions about various government agencies' vulnerability to outside spies.

The FBI affidavit alleged that Wolfe and Miss Thomas stole and copied hundreds of documents during more than a year on their jobs.

The FBI began investigating the matter only after Wolfe and his church supervisor, Michael Meisner, allegedly staged their fourth raid on the office of an assistant U.S. attorney.

A building guard summoned FBI agents after he became suspicious of the IRS credentials the two allegedly had used to gain access to the office after working hours, the affidavit said.

But investigators apparently had little, if any, evidence of the wide-ranging infiltration plot alleged in the affidavit until Meisner allegedly renounced the church, escaped from Scientology leaders holding him under "house arrest" in Los Angeles, and returned to Washington to cooperate in the probe.

Federal officials claim that infiltration by employes covertly gathering information for some outside group is unusual.

The Justice Department personnel officer said he sees no need for changes in the screening procedure because of "the rarity of this situation occurring."

Officials say the screening of applicants for many low-level jobs is often conducted hastily, focusing mostly on criminal and credit records and previous work habits.

The FBI never checks for potential conflicts of interest between the government job and an applicant's private activities.

An FBI spokesman said applicants are never asked whether they have any pending lawsuits against they agency where they are seeking a job. Nor are they asked whether they belong to any associations involved in legal disputes with the agency.

Federal officials say they're not surprised that Wolfe and Thomas landed their jobs with such ease.

"For secretarial jobs, people get rather desperate because they need somebody to do the work," the department personnel officer said.

So an applicant may be rushed into the job on a temporary basis after only a quick name and fingerprint check by the FBI.

That would probably turn up nothing more than an applicant's criminal record. "If that comes back with no known prior arrests, we run the thing through," the official said.

That would be the end of the screening process for many department clerical workers. But others seeking so-called "sensitive" positions requiring them to process classified documents would be subject to a full field investigation by the FBI.

Agents conducting those investigations question a job applicant's neighbors, friends, former employers and other acquaintances.

There is a standard list of queries covering the individual's loyalty to the country, reliability and past job performance. Agents also ask about the person's drinking and sex habits, partly in an effort to guess whether he would be subject to blackmail.

But an FBI spokesman said there are no questions about possible conflicts of interest between the government job and the applicant's affiliations.

Asked why not, the FBI spokesman suggested that "if we asked clerks and secretaries about conflicts of interest, chances are they wouldn't know what we were talking about."

The background checks of high-level presidential appointees do cover possible financial conflicts, he added.

But there are no questions about church affiliation. "It's not the government's business to be interested in someone's religion," the FBI spokesman said.

Now claiming four million followers around the world, the church was founded by L. Ron Hubbard, a one-time science fiction writer.

Scientology doctrine is based on Hubbard's book called "Dianetics, the Modern Science of Mental Health." Converts are guided through stages of "pastoral counseling" to rid their minds of early traumas and break "free from the thralldom of the physical universe."

He's a high-flier in the U-2 jet

'Coffin corner' is thin line between safety, disaster

EIELSON AIR FORCE BASE, Alaska (AP) — Marty Knutson's voice carries a great deal of respect when he talks of the "coffin corner."

For Knutson, who has logged more than 2,000 hours in the cockpit of a high-flying U-2 jet, the "coffin corner" is that thin line between safety and disaster at 70,000 feet.

Knutson is chief of the Airborne Missions and Applications Division of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center at Moffett Field, Calif.

He and four other U-2 pilots were in Alaska recently with two of the once super-secret spy planes for high-altitude photography and stratospheric research. The Korean War veteran says his U-2 flying has always been "in the test area. I've never flown a spy mission."

A sandy-haired man with piercing blue eyes, Knutson would be the casting director's answer as a movie test pilot. He has an easy laugh that blossoms to envelop the listener. His smile demands reciprocity.

But he is serious when he speaks of the U-2, and particularly about that "coffin corner." It involves two phenomena which could spell death for the U-2 pilot — Mach buffet and stall speed.

Mach buffet is the indicated airspeed for a subsonic aircraft where over some portion of the plane's surface the air is moving at the speed of sound, or Mach 1.

"The airplane itself may not be moving at Mach 1, but as the air it is flying through is compressed and moves over different surfaces, it speeds up," Knutson explained. "When the airflow reaches the speed of sound, that is the Mach buffet point."

The stall point is reached when the plane no longer has the speed to keep itself aloft, a condition with increasing potential as the U-2 ascends into the thin air of the stratosphere. Stall means a spin, and spin for the fragile U-2 means breakup.

"The aircraft by its very nature, being lightly constructed so that it can attain altitude, has a limiting airspeed," Knutson said. "If you go too fast, it gets into the Mach buffet, and that can tear the airplane apart. ...

"The aircraft, with a heavy load, may stall at say 97 knots. So you're flying between the stall and the Mach buffet. That's commonly known in this game as the 'coffin corner'. ...

"You have to mind the store in flying the U-2," Knutson said. "There's not an instant to relax."

Yet Knutson, 47 and the father of four, has nothing but praise for the U-2. "If everything is working right, and you're doing everything you should be doing, it's a dead, steady, stable platform. You have no sense of motion.

"It's a very beautiful environment up there, awe-inspiring to me," he said. "You can see a slight curvature of the earth. The sky is a very deep blue, not totally black, but dark enough so you can see the planets if they're in position, even in daytime.

"Flying during sunrise or sunset is especially beautiful, because the setting or rising sun creates bands of color that run from horizon to horizon.

"The earth doesn't look much different than it does when you're flying on a commercial airliner, except that you're seeing a much greater portion of it, some 250 miles in all directions."

Mail order firms sued

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Atty. Gen. Evelle Younger has sued the Daily Sweepstakes, Filter Queen Daily Sweepstakes and Robert Tanguay, charging their mail offers were illegal.

The suit, filed in Superior Court Wednesday, said the defendants sent certificates that looked like checks for $516.08 in order to get leads for vacuum cleaner sales. But the certificates contained unexplained restrictions that made them worthless, the suit said.

Home-building outlook may aid mortgage market sales

SAN FRANCISCO (BW) — Continuing improvement in the California housing situation should have favorable implications for the sale of mortgages in the secondary mortgage market by the state's savings and loan associations, according to Dr. Maurice Mann, president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco.

Addressing the Secondary Mortgage Market Conference sponsored by the California Savings & Loan League here, Mann stated the California housing boom appears to be stabilizing, with the rate of increase in home prices beginning to taper off as the supply of housing begins to catch up with demand in many parts of the state.

Reports of soaring home prices in California and widespread speculation in housing in recent months have caused some overreaction "by those who like to believe that California never does anything halfway — that a housing boom in this state inevitably leads to a bust," Mann declared.

"I do not share in this belief," he said, "and I think it is evident that we have already seen the worst of the boom in California."

The sale of mortgages to lenders and investors in other parts of the country through the secondary market has become an important source of funds for California S&Ls, the FHLB president said. In this way, S&Ls are able to release funds that would be locked up in long-term mortgages so that additional home loans can be made.

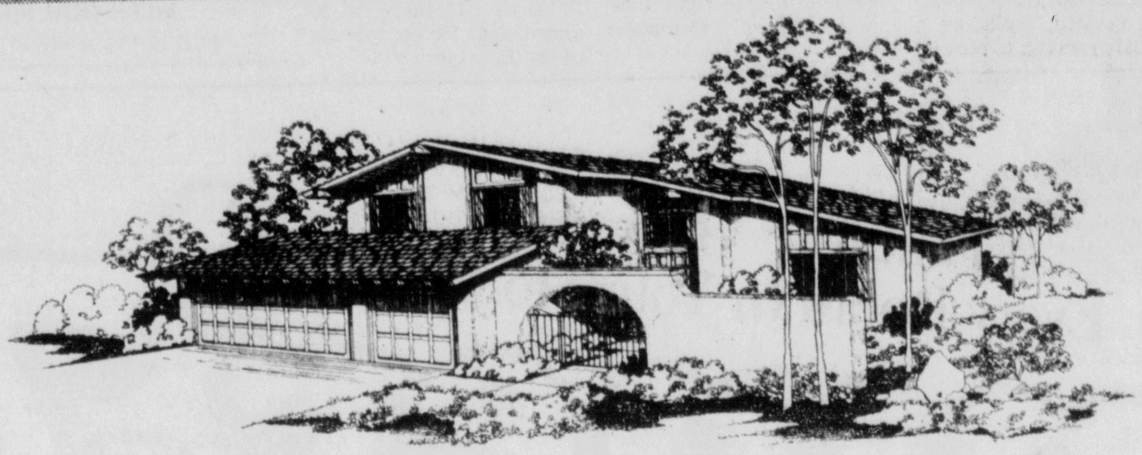
Net sales in the secondary market during 1976 provided nearly $1.7 billion, or 9 per cent of total mortgage loans closed in that year by California S&Ls, Mann added. During the first five months of 1977, net mortgage loan sales were almost $1.4 billion, or 14 per cent of all mortgage loans made by S&Ls in the state.

"This remarkable growth in secondary market activity by California associations is a healthy phenomenon," Mann said. "California S&Ls have been a major force in developing the secondary market as a viable and efficient mechanism for moving funds from regions of the country where they are not needed to areas where there is a shortage of capital for housing, as has been the case in California the past couple of years," he said.

Mann commended savings and loan associations for their efforts to "slow down the boom without causing a downturn," by attempting to weed out speculators and by reducing the level of morgage loan commitments.

"Although the problems in the California housing market have not been completely resolved by any means, I feel confident that the S&L industry is on the right course and will continue to remain vigilant in order to avert any threat of a collapse in the California housing and mortgage markets," he concluded.

Upland North homes slated



UPLAND NORTH—LEWIS HOMES

Upland North, a community of single-family homes with floor plans measuring as much as 2,693 square feet of actual living area, has been announced for immediate construction by Lewis Homes, prominent Southland building firm.

Site of the project is between 20th and 21st Street, at San Antonio Avenue, an area favored by colorful views of mountain peaks.

During the early stage of construction at that site, sales are being conducted from a sales office at Lewis Homes' nearby Presitge Series development located one-half block west of San Antonio Avenue and 22nd Street.

"We have started sales at this time to give early bird buyers a wider choice of lot sites as well as the advantage of pre-completed prices," it was stated by Lewis Homes president Richard A. Lewis. Upland North enters construction with prices scaled from $79,000.

Included in the Upland North purchase price will be refrigerated air-conditioning as well as microwave ovens, instant hot water dispensers, automatic garage door openers and various other amenities.

To give each home a richly carpeted look throughout the house, the carpeting will extend even into the family room, Lewis said.

Buyers will choose from one-story, two-story and split-level elevations. Exterior will reflect contemporary and Mediterranean villa motifs featuring cedar shake roofs.

Designs call for two or three baths, all master bathrooms have dressing areas. The master bedroom suites will feature either mirrored sliding wardrobe doors or walk-in closets.

Ceramic tile entry foyers, luminous ceiling kitchens and wood-burning fireplaces with log-lighters are other refinements noted. Buyers may also select from models with such amenities as wet bars, sunken living rooms and, "greenhouse window" kitchens and three-car garages.

The Upland North sales office may be reached from the San Bernardino Freeway or Foothill Boulevard by turning north at Euclid Avenue in Ontario to 22nd Street, then left just beyond San Antonio Avenue. The sales office is open daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Its phone number is (714) 985-9118.

Real estate

Offered to Congress

Plan slashes 'red tape'

A plan that would slash government red tape and get houses built more quickly under FHA programs was presented to a Congressional committee recently by the National Association of Home Builders.

Testifying before the House Budget Committee on difficulties encountered by builders in the use of FHA subsidized mortgage insurance programs, Ernest A Becker, of Las Vegas, NNAHB's First Vice President, said the main problem for builders under FHA is the lengthy processing time for applications.

Time is a major concern because the builder's "development and construction loans accumulate interest burdens at a compound rate," Becker said. "During 1974, development and construction loans carried interest rates of 15 to 18 per cent and higher. On a $33,000 loan per unit, interest charges at 15 per cent accumulate at $4,950 a year. Second, the builder must worry about the state of the market: will the customers be there a year or two from now when the houses are ready?"

Another problem, Becker said, is the tangle of local building regulations and land controls, "all subject to negotiations with dozens of local officials."

Presently, FHA requires inspection of a new house before, during and after completion. Becker proposed a plan that would cut out some of the processing steps and save time. The builder would submit plans and specifications that are certified to meet FHA's minimum property standards, further certifying that the properties will be built in a subdivision that will be approved and accepted for continuous maintenance by the appropriate local government entity.

FHA would examine the plans and specifications solely to ascribe a value for the proposed loan amount for mortgage insurance. A commitment would be issued by FHA conditioned upon certification that the dwelling unit and surroundings will be completed in substantial conformance with the plans submitted.

Real estate briefs

Vliestra joins Pomona firm

Arnold Realty is pleased to announce the addition of Bart "Bob" Vliesta to its sales staff at 1655 N. Garey Ave., Pomona.

Vliestra has been a resident of Pomona for over twenty years moving here from Hoboken, New Jersey. He has been active in both civic and community affairs and served on the Planning Commission for eight years, one year as chairman. He was also the owner/operator of Building Maintenance Co., located in Pomona, for 20 years.

He is a former Sargeant in the Marine Corps and a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Vliestra has an associate of arts degree from Mt. San Antonio College in business. He will be working in all phases of real estate with an emphasis on investments.

Sales agent appointed for Upland

Walker & Lee, Inc., Anaheim, has been appointed exclusive sales agent for "The Ranch," a $35 million equestrain-oriented new home community in Carbon Canyon, announced Harry Crowell of Crowell/Leventhal, Inc., Upland-based developer.

Merelta Brown has been named sales manager for this prestigious new community. Pre-construction sales are beginning this week on Carbon Canyon Road, just east of Western Hills Gold and Country Club between Chino and Brea.

"The Ranch is a 225 acre, 356 luxury ranch home community with complete equestrian facilities and one of the largest planned new home communities ever approved by San Bernardino County, so naturally we wanted the largest — and best — real estate sales firm we could obtain. That's why we selected Walker & Lee," Crowell said.

"Walker & Lee sold 13,899 new and pre-owned homes (37 each day) for a total volume in sales and services of over $1.5 billion in 1976. Those are very impressive figures and since they provide other marketing services for their builder clients, we know we could not be making an error in appointing them to be "The Ranch's" exclusive sales agent," concluded Crowell.

C/L Inc. is one of Southern California's largest builders reporting a 1976 record of over 400 homes in San Bernardino County with planning to include 1,100 in 1977. C/L also builds commercial centers and apartments including the recently opened Magnolia's Peach Restaurant in Upland.

Homes to be energy efficient

A few years from now, new homes will be designed to use energy efficiently and to save money on fuel, says the Energy Research and Development Administration.

Refrigerator-freezers, for instance, will need only half the electricity of present models and other appliances will be combined so waste heat from one can be used to operate another.

Good windows reduce energy use

Well-built wood windows with insulating glass, says the National Woodwork Manufacturers Association, can sharply reduce the cost of heating and cooling a home. When combined with insulating glass and factory-installed weatherstripping, the wood frame and sash act together with the other window elements to reduce heat loss and costly air infiltration.

Unsightly roof detracts from home

Since the roof is a major architectural feature of a home, a roof with worn shingles is a neighborhood eyesore. The factors that make the roof unsightly may also signal old age and serve as a warning to the homeowner that it's time to reroof. A new roof of asphalt shingles designed to last up to 25 years will improve both the appearance and value of a home.

Aid available for solar heaters

As many as 10,000 homeowners will be eligible to receive as much as $400 each in financial assistance from HUD for the purchase of solar water heaters. The financial assistance is for solar equipment. Installation is not included.

Unwed households increase sharply

The number of unmarried couples living together has risen more than 50 per cent since 1970, while the total number of households rose only 15 per cent. Advertising aimed at unwed couples omits terms such as spouse, wife or husband and avoids showing couples wearing wedding bands or surrounded by children.

Transportation costs outpace housing

Transportation costs for the average American family rose faster in the '60s and '70s than did spending for food and housing. According to the Labor Dept., transportation spending rose from 15 per cent to 20 per cent of family income. Higher priced cars, finance charges, maintenance and gasoline are the reasons for the increase.

Construction costs continue to rise

Material and labor costs in the construction industry rose about 9 per cent in the last twelve months, reports McGraw-Hill Information Services, Inc. The rate is about one per cent higher than in the 1976 period.

Cooperative housing breakthrough seen

SACRAMENTO — A major legislative breakthrough in the financing of cooperative housing units in California was announced today by Jerome Blank, president of the 100,000-member California Association of Realtors.

The measure, SB-475, sponsored by the Realtor's Association and authored by Sen. John Foran (D-San Francisco) was signed into law late last week by Governor Brown.

According to Blank, the bill which becomes operative January 1, 1978, permits State Chartered Banks and Savings and Loan Associations to make loans for the purchase of individual cooperative housing units. The financing package calls for amortized loans up to 30-years in an amount not to exceed 80 per cent of the value of the housing.

Blank explained that the new ligislation would "close an important gap" in consumer financing of this type of housing and would create new home ownership opportunities for thousands of Californians.

"SB-475 will open an entirely new market for financing of cooperative housing units throughout the state which will greatly facilitate the purchase, sale and ownership of such units," Blank said.

Mobile home rent space is still low

While mobile home space rents in the Los Angeles-Orange County area continue to escalate, rentals in semi-outlying communities remain low. As a consequence, these areas are rapidly filling, and are the basis for the continuing strength of mobile home sales.

Sequoia Plaza Mobile Home Park in San Bernardino reports that of its 242 spaces only 95 are left, and they have been renting at the rate of over 15 a month. This is typical of the fill rate of top quality parks in outlying areas, although Sequoia is hardly typical, with 15,000 square foot clubhouse, a 4,000 square foot ballroom and a lake complete with swans.

While the quality of Sequoia Plaza Park is probably not exceeded anywhere in the United States, the rents bear comparison with those in the southern states, with monthly rentals for double wide spaces running from $77.50 to $87.50.

Guest-home dome guards against disaster

American style: 'survival sphere' man's haven, a modern-day ark

ROSELAND, Va. (AP) — In a mountain valley high in the Blue Ridge chain, along a quiet country road and behind a white-frame house, lies man's modern-day ark.

"Some people call it an ark, but I call it a survival sphere," said Joe Campbell, who with his son Mark designed and is building a geodesic dome that is "earthquake-proof, hurricane-proof and flood-proof."

Campbell, once a journalist and a Methodist minister, now a homesteader and house-builder, points out the dome's practical aspects — he'll use it as an office for his construction company and business consulting firm and as a guest house for visitors.

Seen from 200 yards away, it looks something like a bg balloon.

The idea, Campbell said, was the result of "brain-storming" that began when his church group discussed catastrophes. Legendary survivors all were well-prepared, he noted.

He liked the challenge of designing and building something to withstand disaster — a challenge that has cost him more than $22,000. And, he said, "I suppose I have this gnawing inside me that something is going to happen."

Its walls and bottom, for example, are designed to withstand ramming by the sort of objects one would encounter in a flood.

The bottom of the sphere is made of ferro cement poured through layers of wire mesh and is laced with steel ballasts, the walls have layers of plywood, steel cable, urethane, styrofoam, dynel fabric and brass "fabric" and the outside is covered with concrete which will be painted forest green to blend with its environment.

The dome is anchored in Campbell's backyard by a pipe through its center and five chains that can withstand 200 to 250 mile an hour winds, Campbell said.

There are plans for a sophisticated communications system, including a television screen to pick up weather satellite pictures. And the Campbells will keep it stocked with food to last 12 people a year.

Campbell got his idea for one safety feature while covering a space shot for Mutual Broadcasting Co. during the 1960s.

To wash off nuclear fallout, he has installed a "scrubber" and sprinkler system similar to one he saw on a nuclear carrier. "It's conceivable that in a nuclear attack ... we can continue to live right here in the sphere," Campbell said.

The interior isn't finished, but the 22-foot span in all directions gives an airy feeling reminiscent of a plush guest cottage. It has three bedrooms, kitchen, bathroom, a living room which will be ringed by a 30-foot couch, a library and two storage holds. A wood stove provides heat.

Campbell, 53, and Mark, 28, have been working on the dome for about two years. The outside is finished, but there is no target date for completion of the interior.

Campbell's may be the first "survival sphere," but there will be others. He has seven or eight orders and has stopped taking them.

Neighbors in the Blue Ridge Valley aren't among those who kid Joe Campbell about building an ark. The area was deluged with 32 inches of rainfall one night in 1969 during Hurricane Camille.

Campbell especially liked the reaction of one neighbor who toured the sphere and told him, "Just keep on doing what you're doing."

RECORD BREAKER

Garvey's bunt ruins Owchinko, Padres

Progress Bulletin
Sports
Pomona, California ■ Sunday, July 17, 1977

By JIM McCONNELL
PB Staff Writer

SAN DIEGO — That Great Dodger in the Sky is back on duty.

The Dodgers, suffering through a miserable streak of baseball which had seen them drop six of seven games, received a lot of help from the Man upstairs, and the strong left arm of Tommy John, to best the Padres 1-0 in a drama-filled contest Saturday night.

John fired a four-hitter to outduel San Diego rookie southpaw Bob Owchinko, but Owchinko looked like he was going to be the big story after the first seven innings.

The hard-throwing Eastern Michigan U. product had completely stifled the Dodgers, mowing down their first 22 batters in order, as Steve Garvey stepped to the plate in the top of the eighth.

Garvey, to the surprise of the Padres and the dismay of the crowd of 37,684, dumped a bunt down the third base line on the first pitch Owchinko threw to him, and outraced Tucker Ashford's hurried throw to first for the first L.A. hit and baserunner of the game.

Garvey's bunt set up the game's only run and made John a winner for the 10th time this year vs. four losses.

Owchinko, who came into the game with a lackluster 3-4 mark and a 5.26 earned run average, suffered the heart-breaking loss.

"I had been planning the bunt since my second at bat vs. Owchinko," Garvey said afterward. "He had us helpless offensively and I figured it might break up his concentration if nothing else."

Oddly enough, Garvey revealed that Padre catcher Dave Roberts had yelled to third baseman Ashford on the pitch before to be alert for the bunt.

"I noticed that he (Ashford) was playing a little behind the bag so I figured I'd give it a shot anyway," Garvey said. "Fortunately, it was a perfect bunt and kind of broke the ice for us."

Owchinko appeared to be flustered by the tactic, and although he got Dusty Baker to force Garvey at second, he then surrendered a hit-and-run single to center to light-hitting Glenn Burke.

That brought up Steve Yeager, and the Dodger catcher came through with a line single to left to bring home Baker with the bacon.

"He (Owchinko) had used the same pattern to me in my other two times up, starting me with a curve," Yeager said. "When he did that again in the eighth, I figured a fastball was coming next and I got it. I was just trying to meet the ball."

John pitched a strong game in notching his first shutout of the season and the 31st of his career. The veteran lefty recorded 21 of the 27 outs on groundballs as his sinker kept the Padres beating the ball into the ground all night long.

"I had a real good sinking fastball tonight," said John. "In fact, it was so good I threw very few curveballs all night long.

"On a night like this with the other guy pitching a perfect game it's too easy to hang a curve and have a guy like Winfield or Kingman jerk it right out of here."

John admitted he felt the pressure of being involved with Owchinko's bid for a no-hitter.

"Yes, there was a certain amount of pressure out there to begin with because of the way we've been going," John revealed. "Then, by the fourth or fifth inning, it really built up because of the perfect game and the fact that we knew the Reds had lost to the Astros. I knew then I had to throw my best game."

"Tommy John was super!" a happy Lasorda said afterward. "When we have needed a win he's given us the big game."

Lasorda also had praise for the Dodger defense, and in particular shortstop Bill Russell.

"Russell's like a Picasso out there," gushed the Dodger skipper. "I'll tell you, it's not easy to play in the infield when John pitches, but Russell was just great out there tonight."

Russell and second baseman Teddy Martinez made several tough plays look easy in keeping the Padres off the scoreboard. In particular, Martinez' stop of a Mike Champion grounder with two out and a runner at second in the fifth saved a run for John and L.A.

Martinez ranged behind the bag at second to corral the the grounder and fired a strike to first to nip Champion.

The win improves the Dodger lead in the N.L. West to 8½ games over the Reds with one game remaining before the All-Star break.

DODGER DATA — Pitching matchups for today's 1 p.m. series finale will pit Doug Rau (10-1) vs. San Diego's Bob Shirley (6-10). That contest will be televised on KTTV, Channel 11.

Davey Lopes, who had started Friday night for the first time in over a week, was out of the lineup again Saturday. Lopes said his bruised left hand was was still not 100 percent and it was decided to rest him until after the All-Star break.

The Padres' John D'Aquisto was originally slated to start Saturday but pulled a muscle in his side during batting practice and had to miss the turn. He is expected back after the All-Star Game.

Gene Tenace and George Hendrick were fined by Padre president Buzzie Bavasi Saturday for failing to attend an Autograph Night the club sponsored before Friday's game. It was reported that Hendrick never attended a Padre promotional or team function since he joined S.D. this year.

Rollie Fingers continued his near-perfect pitching vs. L.A. with a scoreless ninth inning. Fingers is 2-0 with three saves vs. the Dodgers in six games, and has allowed no runs on only two hits in eight innings of work.

Ryan notches record

By BILL LANGLEY
PB Sports Editor

ANAHEIM — Nolan Ryan replaced Sandy Koufax in one of baseballs many record departments Saturday night but The Express was more concerned about getting the Angels back in the win column.

Ryan struck out 12 Seattle Mariners in front of 29,068 Helmet Night fans at Anaheim Stadium for the 98th time in his career he has fanned 10 or more batters in a game to surpass the previous record of 97 set by Koufax.

However, Ryan is happier about becoming major league baseball's first 13-game winner as he hurled a five-hitter to edge the pesky Mariners, 5-4, after the expansion team took the first two games of the series.

"I didn't go out there to the mound tonight to break a record," the calm Ryan said. "I just wanted a good game so we could break our losing streak."

What does the record mean to Ryan?

"It indicates I've taken good stuff to the mound with some consistency," he answered.

Ryan would have enjoyed an easy laugher Saturday except for his own wildness in the third inning when the Mariners scored all four runs.

After hitting catcher Bob Stinson with an 0-2 pitch, Ryan allowed three walks and two singles in the frame with Bill Stein's bases-loaded hit putting Seattle ahead 4-2.

"After the hit Stinton, I seemed to lose my rhythm through the rest of the inning," Ryan said. "I was able to concentrate more the rest of the way and make adjustments."

Walks are still Ryan's biggest problem. He allowed six free passes Saturday to build his season total to 133 at the All-Star break.

"I feel I've had a good start this season with a 13-8 record," Ryan said. "The one thing I would like to change during the second half of the season would be cutting down my walk totals considerably."

Ryan also has 234 strikeouts and moved into the 18th on the all-time list by passing Rube Waddell with 2,319.

The Angels used the long ball for all of their runs Saturday with Don Baylor belting his 10th home run of the season to open the eighth inning against reliever Enrique Romo for the game-winning hit.

Earlier, shortstop Rance Mulliniks and Tony Solaita hit homers to give Ryan a 4-4 tie until Baylor connected.

Ryan will now enjoy a rest during the All-Star break as he rejected a final appeal by American League President Lee MacPhail to participate in Tuesday's classic in New York.

"I'm going to the beach and then take my kids to San Diego to visit the zoo and Sea World," he said.

ANGEL ANGLES — The series ends today (1 p.m.) with Paul Hartzell (3-6) going against Gary Wheelock (4-6).

The Mariners, who are hoping to become baseball's best-ever expansion team, are 29-27 since May 15 with 20 of the victories coming on the road.

Reds, injuries might plague AL

NEW YORK (AP) — If the National League continues its mastery of the American League in Tuesday night's 48th All-Star Game at Yankee Stadium, the Cincinnati Reds might get a lion's share of the credit.

You might give an assist to circumstance, as well.

The defending world champions of baseball have no less than four players in the starting lineup and a total of seven on the squad for the Nationals.

Such familiar All-Star names as catcher Johnny Bench, second baseman Joe Morgan, shortstop Dave Concepcion and outfielder George Foster will give the National League a distinctly Red color when baseball's midsummer night's dream game gets underway at 5:30 p.m. PDT.

Those Cincinnati players have had a significant hand in past All-Star contests, most of which have resulted in the National League's favor.

Enhancing the National League's chances this year is an uncanny string of injuries which have hit many of the American League's top stars. Two of the AL's leading pitchers, California's Frank Tanana and Detroit's Mark Fidrych, will be missing because of physical disabilities and another, California's Nolan Ryan, is out with a bruised ego.

Ryan, the American League strikeout king, was a last-minute selection by New York Manager Billy Martin in lieu of Tanana and Fidrych and balked over this late selection.

Informed that he could very well be the American League's starting pitcher, Ryan fumed, "That might be very difficult since I'm going to be lying on the beach at Laguna. If I can't go on my own merits, I'm not going!"

Along with the missing pitchers, the American League will have some walking wounded in the starting lineup. First baseman Rod Carew, the major league's leading hitter who had been over .400 most of the season until a recent slump, has been playing with a bad back. Richie Zisk of Chicago, one of the AL's outfielders, was out of action recently after being struck by a line drive.

Not as many problems have manifested themselves for the National League, although Houston's All-Star pitcher, Joaquin Andujar, had a recent hamstring injury and is a doubtful participant.

A sellout crowd of 55,000 is expected at venerable Yankee Stadium to watch the National League All-Stars shoot for their sixth straight victory and 14th in the last 15 games over their American League counterparts. Overall, the older league holds a commanding 28-18 edge and there has been one tie.

The Cincinnati-flavored National League also includes two players from the Los Angeles Dodgers—golden boy Steve Garvey, a four million-vote hitter with the fans, and Ron Cey. Garvey will start at first base for the National League and Cey at third.

The rest of the NL's starting lineup includes strongman Greg Luzinski of the Philadelphia Phillies and slugger Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates in the outfield.

Along with Carew and Zisk, the American League's starting lineup will feature catcher Carlton Fisk, shortstop Rick Burleson and outfielder Carl Yastrzemski of the Boston Red Sox; second baseman Willie Randolph and outfielder Reggie Jackson of the New York Yankees, and third baseman George Brett of the Kansas City Royals.

Each of the starters voted into the lineup by the fans is required to play at least three innings.

The starting pitchers for each team will be announced Monday by the respective managers. Cincinnati's Sparky Anderson, the National League manager, can choose from a group that includes Tom Seaver of Cincinnati, Rick Reuschel and Bruce Sutter of the Chicago Cubs, Don Sutton of Los Angeles, Steve Carlton of Philadelphia, Gary Lavelle of San Francisco, John Candelaria of Pittsburgh and Andujar.

Without Ryan, the American League's pitching staff includes, Baltimore's Jim Palmer, California's Dave LaRoche, Vida Blue of Oakland, Bill Campbell of Boston, Sparky Lyle of New York and Cleveland's Jim Kern.

Carew has some of the most impressive offensive figures of the AL starters. Through last Thursday, he showed a .391 batting average that included 129 hits, 14 of them triples. The Minnesota first baseman had 56 RBI. Zisk, a transplanted National Leaguer who played for Pittsburgh last season, boasted 19 home runs, 62 RBI and a .300 average.

Yastrzemski had 17 homers, 59 RBI and a .307 batting average. Burleson was batting .298. Jackson's figures included 15 homers and 48 RBI; Willie Randolph was hitting .303; George Brett .278 and Fisk .319 with 16 homers and 51 RBI, all through last Thursday.

Garvey, who became the first player to receive more than four million votes in leading the balloting for the National League, had collected 80 RBI and 22 homers while hitting .292. Cey's figures included a .274 batting average, 74 RBI and 17 home runs.

Bench had 20 homers and 66 RBI; Morgan a .317 batting average, 12 homers and 47 RBI; Concepcion, a .293 average and 37 RBI; Foster, a .310 average, 88 RBI and 28 homers; Duzinski, .322, 63 RBI and 19 homers and Parker, .334, 14 homers and 62 RBI.

Ray Floyd can't imagine losing

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Ray Floyd, owning a solid, three-stroke advantage, isn't even considering the possibility of losing the lead today in the final round of the $250,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic.

"I'm playing much too well for it to happen," Floyd said Saturday after his four-under-par 67—coupled with double bogey disaster that struck down the other contenders—had staked him to sole control of the top spot in the chase for the $50,000 first prize.

"I hope this doesn't come off the wrong way, but I know how well I'm playing. I have total confidence. I'm playing golf now like riding a bicycle. You just get on it and do it without thinking about it.

"That's the way I'm playing. My swing is too good to produce a bad round. I'm not even thinking of the possibility.

"I have nothing but positive thoughts, very positive thoughts.

"Any time you have an established player three strokes in front going into the last round, he's going to be hard to handle. He only got there by playing the first three rounds better than anyone else.

"If he's swinging well, playing well, confident, there's no reason his game should change in the last round."

Floyd, winner of the Byron Nelson Classic earlier this season and a former Masters champion, finished three trips over the hilly, 7,191-yard Plesant Valley Country Club course with a 202 total, 11-under-par.

Jack Nicklaus and little Rod Curl, who entered the day's play in a tie for the top with Floyd, each encountered a double bogey on his way to a 70 that left them tied for second at 205.

Nicklaus was tied for the lead until he drove into trouble on the 13th, took four to get on and made his round-destroying six.

Curl also fell out of the share of the top spot with his double bogey. It came after he put his tee shot unplayable under a bush on the par-three 14th.

Gary Player, also victim of a double bogey, and Rik Massengale were four shots back of the leader at 206. Player shot a 69 in the hot, humid, hazy weather, while Massengale broke the two-day-old tournament record with an eight-under-par 63.

Massengale, wire-to-wire winner of the Bob Hope Desert Classic early this season, splashed 10 threes across his card and played the front side in 29.

"Usually, when you make the cut by one shot, you're just out there on Saturday to finish it," Massengale said. "After the position I was in, I'm just happy to be on the leader board. I can't explain the round, I'm surprised it happened."

Bruce Lietzke, twice a winner and twice a runner-up this year, was at 207 after a 68 and Tom Watson, winner of both the Masters and last week's British Open, headed a large group at 208. Watson shot a third-round 69.

Lee Trevino and PGA champion Dave Stockton were well back at 212. Trevino had a 69, Stockton a 74.

Tom Weiskopf completed 36 holes in this designated tournament in which all leading players are required to compete, but withdrew before the start of Saturday's play, citing personal reasons.

Floyd's putting was the key to his round.

After Nicklaus and Curl backed off, he had to save par with a 12-foot putt on the 14th and stretched his lead with a 10-foot birdie on the 17th.

He had scored two earlier birdies on long putts of perhaps 35 feet and got the other two from the 10-15 foot range.

"I had pretty good momentum," Nicklaus said, "but the double bogey killed it."

"I just used the wrong club," the 5-foot-5 Curl said of his double bogey. "It's a hot day and the shot just took off."

Jackson wins title

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Anthony Jackson of Fremont Junior High in Pomona sailed 20 feet, 3½ inches to win the long jump title for 13-year-olds in the AAU Jr. Nationals here Saturday

Jackson's leap is the second-best in AAU history for his age group. The national record is an incredible 23-foot jump by Anthony Gibson in 1975.

Jackson, who is now 14 but was 13 during the registration period for the 1977 season, took a lifetime best of 19-9¾ into the meet.

In the 220, Jackson fell into the tape in a semifinal run Saturday and failed to qualify for today's finals. He was running second before he fell. His best in the 220 is 23.4 seconds.

Namath may throw this week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Namath is still showing some effects from a muscle strain in his left side suffered two weeks ago, but the new Los Angeles quarterback will hopefully begin throwing this week, a Rams spokesman said Saturday.

Namath, the former New York Jet signed by the Rams, took his pre-training camp physical Saturday. According to the National Football League team spokesman, Dr. Robert Kerlan said Namath had suffered a slight muscle strain under his left rib cage, an injury common to quarterbacks.

The doctor said Namath's injury was "close to being healed," and that the quarterback should decide for himself when he wants to begin throwing.

Namath has scheduled a press conference for Monday, when the Rams' training camp opens at nearby Fullerton State.

Hunt easily takes race

SILVERSTONE, England (AP) — World champion James Hunt of Britain drove his McLaren to an easy victory in the British Grand Prix Saturday after his closest challengers were forced into the pits.

Niki Lauda of Austria finished second in a Ferrari and Gunnar Nilsson of Sweden was third in a Lotus Ford.

It was Hunt's first Grand Prix victory of the year. He roared away on his own over the last 15 laps of the 68-lap race after John Watson of Northern Ireland, the pacesetter, dropped out with fuel pressure trouble.

Watson, starting beside Hunt on the front row of the grid, had led all the way until that point.

"It was a heck of a race until John stopped," Hunt said. "He was driving so well, and unless he made a mistake he had the race won.

"Of course, I am happy to win, but above everything else I feel sorry for John."

Jody Scheckter of South Africa, in a March Ford, and Mario Andretti of Nazareth, Pa., in a Lotus Ford, both challenging Lauda for second place, also dropped out late in the race.

Lauda took a big lead in the world championship standings with 39 points. Scheckter and Andretti have 32 apiece, Carlos Reutemann of Argentina 28, Hunt 22 and Nilsson 20.

Hunt covered the 199.37-mile course in 1 hour, 31 minutes, 46.06 seconds, an average speed of 130.36 miles per hour. Lauda was timed in 1:32:04.37 and Nilsson in 1:32:05.63.

Jochen Mass of West Germany finished fourth in a JPS Lotus, Hans Stuck of West Germany fifth in a Brabham and Jacques Laffite of France sixth in a Ligier Matra.

Hunt clocked the fastest lap at 1:19.60, an average speed of 132.60 m.p.h.

A crowd of 100,000 jammed the Silverstone circuit.

The most exciting point of the race came on the 22nd lap when Hunt, after a slow start, made a spectacular move and passed Lauda into second place at the chicane before the home straight. Watson, Hunt and Lauda then battled closely for the lead. They stayed in that order for a while, but after the halfway mark Lauda began to lose ground and it became a duel between Watson and Hunt.

Hunt, the fastest qualifier, admitted that Watson's car had a more powerful engine than his, and chose the inside spot on the front row of the grid because he feared Watson would reach the first bend ahead of him and get a grip on the race.

That was exactly what happened—even though Hunt had the advantage of the bend. Watson raced ahead, and for the first few laps had Lauda and Scheckter behind him, with Hunt fourth. The extra power of Watson's Brabham gave him the advantage on the long straight stretches.

Baugh tied for lead

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Laura Baugh, winless in her five years as a pro, fired her lowest competitive round ever, a seven-under-par 65, and moved into a tie for the 36-hole lead Saturday with JoAnne Carner in an $80,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

The 22-year-old blonde, the LPGA's glamour queen, posted another personal record, nine birdies, in running her two-day total to 15 birdies over the Riviera Country Club's 6,634-yard course.

Mrs. Carner, the first-round leader, played what she termed a lackadaisical round of 70 in equalling Miss Baugh's 36-hole total of 136, eight-under-par going into Sunday's final 18 holes.

The leaders were three shots ahead of the field in the chase for the first prize of $12,000.

Defending champion Judy Rankin sank a 10-foot putt on the 18th green for a 69 and moved into a three-way tie for third place with Carol Mann, a former two-time winner in this tourney, and winless Dot Germain. Miss Mann fired a 69 and Miss Germain a 71.

Another stroke back at 140 were Kathy Whitworth, who shot a 68 Saturday; Donna Caponi Young, Pat Meyers and Susan O'Connor. Miss Meyers and Miss O'Connor registered 69s, while Mrs. Young had a 70.

Miss Baugh, a co-leader twice and a sole frontrunner once before going into a final round, believes she now has the experience to handle the pressure.

"I've learned a tremendous amount from the other players and myself. I've never hit the ball as good as this year. I just have to give myself a certain amount of time to win," said the tour's 18th leading money winner with nearly $21,000 this year.

She had birdies on Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, 15, 17 and 18 and bogeys at Nos. 1 and 16.

"I was next to a tree on my second shot on one, and at 15, I three-putted from 12 feet," she said in explaining her two bad holes.

Ump can't beat heat

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Chicago Cubs-Philadelphia Phillies game was held up in the sixth inning Saturday when home plate umpire Doug Harvey was overcome by intense heat and humidity.

The game was delayed 12 minutes while Harvey received treatment from the Chicago trainer. Finally, he left the game and it was resumed with three umpires.

The temperature at Veterans Satadium was reported by the U.S. Weather Service to be about 92 degrees when the game began, at 2:15 p.m.

Just prior to the start of the game, however, a Phillies spokesman said that the temperature of the artificial surface of the playing field registered 135 degrees.

Jets deal Hill

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — The New York Jets have traded 14-year veteran offensive tackle Winston Hill to the Miami Dolphins for conditional future considerations, the National Football League team announced Saturday.

Hill served for years as the main protector of quarterback Joe Namath, who left the team earlier this year for the Los Angeles Rams. The departure of both men leaves Randy Rasmussen the only remaining player from the Super Bowl III champion Jets.

Bruins name coach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jim Harrick, a Utah State assistant basketball coach for the last four years, has been named to a similar post at UCLA, where he'll serve under new Bruins Coach Gary Cunningham.

Harrick, whose appointment was announced Friday, is 39 and a graduate of Morris Harvey College in Charleston, W. Va.. He earned a masters degree from the University of Southern California.

Sneva captures pole with 200 mph effort

CAMBRIDGE JUNCTION, Mich (AP) — Tom Sneva, track record holder at Indianapolis Motor Speedway and the first to officially break the 200 miles per hour barrier there, again topped 200 miles an hour Saturday in winning the pole position for Sunday's Indianapolis car portion of the Norton Twin 200s.

A.J. Foyt, whose Coyote's suspension collapsed on his first fast practice lap, failed to get his car repaired in time to qualify.

Sneva brought his brand new Penske PC5-Cosworth around car owner Roger Penske's twomile Michigan International Speedway at 200.278 m.p.h., edging Johnny Rutherford by .02 seconds for the day's fastest speed. Rutherford was clocked at 200.167 m.p.h. in a McLaren M24-Cosworth.

"The Penske and the McLaren are very similar," said Sneva, leader in this season's national championship standings. "The chassis is a little more squared off than the M24 and the suspension geometry is different."

The Penske Team used a McLaren they ran earlier this season to design debut sometime next season.

Team McLaren members refer to the Penske car as "the McLaren M24P" because it is so similar to their design.

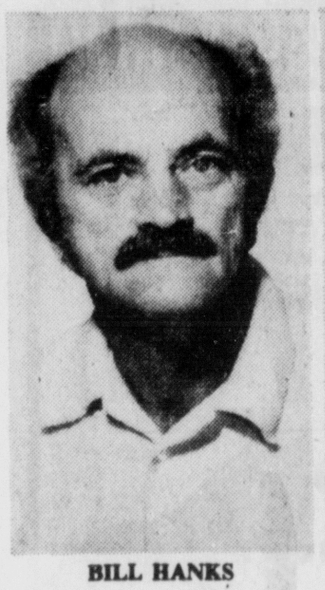
Perrin, Hanks, 2 valley pros to run Glenoaks

By PHIL ROCHE
PB Staff Writer

A couple of popular, well-established professionals in this area were awarded the contract to manage Glenoaks Municipal Golf Center by the Glendora City Council Tuesday.

Bruce Perrin and Bill Hanks, former assistant pros at Marshall Canyon, will take over management of the golf center on Aug. 1.

They plan to use the name Glenoaks Golf and Racquet Club since the center located at 200 W. DawsonAve., Glendora contains not only a par 3 course and driving range but also six lighted tennis courts. Two indoor racquet ball courts are also in the planning stages.



BILL HANKS

BRUCE PERRIN

Perrin, an outstanding golfer and teacher, has been assistant pro at Marshall Canyon since it opened in 1967. Prior to that he was assistant pro at San Dimas Canyon Golf Course, formerly called Grayoaks.

Perrin rates as one of the area's top authorities on the mechanics of the golf swing.

Hanks served as head professional at Springbrook Golf Course in Riverside before taking the Marshall Canyon post in 1972. Two years later he returned to college, majoring in psychology and sociology at La Verne for two and one half years. He also attended Claremont Graduate School, where he studied crime prevention and causes of juvenile delinquency.

He rejoined Marshall Canyon in 1976 where he has served as assistant pro to Bob Clare.

Both Perrin and Hanks are optimistic about their new venture. "We plan to put in a snack bar and offer a complete line of golf and tennis merchandise," says Hanks.

The present pro shop will be completely remodeled, and both pros will be available for golf instruction.

In fact, Hanks, who has worked for years with troubled youths, hopes to bring in many youngsters from camps and show them how to hit a golf ball.

"Both of us will do our best to make this a great golf and racquet center," said Hanks.

Three valley golfers, Jan Siletto of San Dimas, Robert Johnson of Walnut, and George Marty also of Walnut, are among 80 amateurs selected to team with celebrities in the seventh annual Dick Whittinghill Tournament at Los Alamitos on Saturday, July 30.

Chino's Lynn Stone, 20, a senior at Cal State Fullerton, played one of the finest rounds in the 3-year history of the Confidence Western Amateur tour Monday when he carded a 4-under-par 68 at Via Verde C.C.

Stone didn't make a mistake on the tight, 6,517-yard course except on the par 3 third hole where he missed the green and had to save par with a 7-foot putt. "He could have shot 60 if some of the putts had gone in," said one of his playing partners.

Upland's fine player, Gerry Simoni, finished second in the WAGA event with a 2-under-par 70, one stroke in front of Mike Bicker of Claremont who tied with three others at 71 but won the third place playoff.

There were 145 of the Southland's top amateurs in the field.

One of the outstanding tournaments annually in the valley, the Diamond Bar Invitational, will be played Sunday, Aug. 28, Winston James, tournament director, announced.

The event is a partners best ball, 18-hole tournament over the challenging Diamond Bar Golf Course. Entry is $25 per player, and a maximum 10 stroke differential between partners has been set.

Entry forms can be obtained at Diamond Bar or by contacting James at 595-4674.

The National Association of Amateur Golfers is scheduled to play Indian Hills C.C. in Riverside Saturday.

Jim Kremer, assistant pro at the El Prado courses in Chino, had everything going his way Tuesday when he posted a 4-under-par 68 at Butterfield Stage to set a new record for that course.

Kremer knocked in five birdie putts and scored only one bogey over the 6,448-yard layout in his record-shattering round. For the record he birdied 4, 9, 12, 15, and 16, and his only bogey came on No. 13.

Jim is in just a bit of trouble these days however. The old mark of 69 was held by his boss, head professional Bob Bickford. Anyway, Bob said Thursday he was out to set a new record about now.

Kremer leaves this week for Kansas City, Mo., where he'll be vacationing and golfing with his old college friends. "I think my game is just about ready," he says. We think so too.

So, you know a player who'd like to be on the PGA Tour. Tell him that the new schedule for qualifying has been set up, and it runs something like this.

Four regionals will be conducted concurrently from Oct. 18-21. The Western regional will be held at Torrey Pines South, San Diego; the Mid-South regional will be held at Timberland C.C., Gretna, La.; the Florida regional set for Bardmoor C.C., Tampa; and the Mid-Atlantic regional will be at International Town and Country Club, Fairfax, Va.

Qualifiers from the regionals will compete in the PGA School the week of Nov. 9 at Pinehurst, N.C.

Candidates for the school, however, will compete in sectional qualifying rounds in September. The dates and sites for the sectional have not been finalized.

Candidates can obtain applications for the school and qualifying rounds by contacting PGA Tour Headquarters, 5101 River Road, Washington, D.C. 20016. Entry fee for the sectionals is $100; for the regionals, $200. There is no additional entry fee.

George Walker of Huntington Beach shot a 75 Wednesday to win low gross at Azusa Greens for the National Association of Amateur golfers.

Alec Mitchell of Tustin and Wyatt Waterman of Orange tied for low net with 64s.

Today's relief pitcher unique breed

NEW YORK (AP) — Skip Lockwood of the New York Mets says being a relief pitcher is easy. There's nothing to it.

"You just come to the ballpark every day with the idea that you're going to pitch," the Mets' relief ace says. "You get yourself into a routine and it becomes pretty easy. You make sure you do the same thing every day so you don't hurt your arm."

"You've got to take care of your arm," says Bruce Sutter of the Chicago Cubs. "You have to be able to tell them when you can't pitch."

Sutter has pitched well and often for the Cubs this season. His split-finger fastball, which is what Sutter calls his forkball, has had National League hitters baffled from opening day and has had the Cubs on top of the National League East.

The relief specialist is a unique breed. He thrives on work. There are no three or four-day rests between assignments. It's an everyday job.

"I wish Whitey (Herzog) would use me more," says Kansas City ace Mark Littell. "It seems like the more often I pitch, the better I do. If I go too long without working, I lose my sharpness and have trouble getting loose."

Whether it's the split-finger fastball, the screwball or the knuckler, relievers must use their best pitch in pressure situations. And pressure, physical and mental, is an intricate part of the relief pitcher's life.

"It (the pressure) is not something you learn to cope with," says San Diego's Rollie Fingers. "You just go out there and do what you have to do."

"I really enjoy those tight situations when the game is on the line," says Pittsburgh's Rich Gossage. "I have no problem at all getting charged up. Just hand me the ball and I'm psyched."

"As a short reliever, I know exactly what I have to do," Lockwood adds. "I come in and throw as hard as I can for as long as I have to."

Clay Carroll, former National League Fireman-of-the-Year, now with the St. Louis Cardinals, says the mental pressure is what troubles young relievers the most.

"I think the pressure is mostly mental," Carroll says. "if you don't think you're going to get the hitter out, you probably won't. I can relax because I'm used to it. Maybe with a younger guy the pressure might be too much."

"I drink a lot," Dodger knuckleballer Charlie Hough quips. "No, seriously, you come to the ballpark knowing you might have something to do with the outcome of the game and that's fun."

Sutter says pitchers aren't the only ones under pressure. "I think there's as much if not more pressure on the TARKENTON'S SUCCESSOR? — Rookie quarterback Tommy Kramer of the Minnesota Vikings may be the future leader of the NFL club. He'll play behind veteran Fran Tarkenton.

America's Cup belongs to very rich

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The guest list of one of Mrs. Astor's social register parties could once have read: Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Vanderbilt; Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan; Sir Thomas J. Lipton, and Thomas O. M. Sopwith.

The names come to mind during the summer months once every three years or so, in this affluent Atlantic Ocean Resort—over which Mrs. Astor's palacial mansion looks majestically—during the America's Cup yacht races.

Down the hill from Mrs. Astor's cottage, as it is called, is the white steepled Trinity Church, where George Washington often attended services, and the Colony House, where the first American colony declared its independence from Great Britain.

Still further down the hill are the piers where the Kings Point Syndicate-owned Courageous and Independence, the Fort Schuyler Foundation-owned Enterprise, the France I , the Sverige, of Sweden and Australia's Gretel II and Australia are berthed.

The names now include the likes of Atlanta Braves' owner Ted Turner, skipper of Courageous; French baron Marcel Bich, who forged a ball point pen fortune, and Australian real estate millionaire Alan Bond, who heads the syndicate which owns Australia.

Throughout its history, the America's Cup, the world's oldest continuous sports competition, has been restricted to the richest of the rich, the bluest of the blue bloods. It is called the Holy Grail of yachting and it does not come cheaply.

Observations trials for the three American 12-meter yachts vying to defend the Cup began this weekend. Next month, more trials will be held to determine the U.S. defender, and trials also will be held to determine the foreign challenger. There are four challengers—two Austrailian, one French and, for the first time in the 126-year history of the Cup, a Swedish yacht.

No country but America ever has owned the America's Cup, a bottomless silver ewer, originally worth about 100 guineas. Many challengers — 22 in all — have tried to wrest the Cup away from the Yanks.

The most classic money matchup probably was between Lipton, a self-made millionaire, who was knighted in 1898, and American financier Morgan.

In 1899, Lipton brought his brand new 129-foot Shamrock I to Sandy Hook, N.J., to challenge Morgan's Columbia, designed and built by Captain Nat Herreshoff, who already had produced two Cup defenders and would design each subsequent defender through 1920.

Lipton lost in three races, but he was not discouraged. While he would make every foreign challenge for the next 31 years—and lose them all—his name would become a household word in the United States.

His last challenge, in 1930, was with the first of the J class sloops, Shamrock V and came against the original Enterprise, skippered by Vanderbilt. Lipton lost that one too, 4-0.

Knicks sign UNLV star

NEW YORK (AP) — Glen Gondrezick of Nevada-Las Vegas and Toby Knight of Notre Dame signed with the New York Knicks of the National Basketball Association, the club said Monday.

Both players were selected by the Knicks in the second round of the NBA's 1977 college draft.

Gondrezick, the 26th player chosen in the draft, is a 6-foot-6 forward-guard. Knight, the 32nd player chosen, is a 6-foot-9 forward.

Godrezick started every game for the past three seasons at Nev-Las Vegas and had a field goal shooting percentage of 50 per cent.

Rookie QB may be star

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Rookie Tommy Kramer doesn't expect to oust the legendary Fran Tarkenton as the Minnesota Vikings' starting quarterback this year but he's going to be ready if an opportunity arises.

"I feel I'm good enough to play here," says Kramer, who has been working out daily during the last month with several other area professional hopefuls.

"At the quarterback position, you have to thrive on competition and pressure," said Kramer. "The Vikings also have a fine backup quarterback in Bob Lee so there'll be a lot of competition,"

The 22-year-old Kramer, who is the only quarterback ever taken in the first round by the Vikings, has been throwing hundreds of balls daily to a spirited corps of receivers, including former Minnesota quarterback Tony Dungy, St. Cloud speedster John Kimbrough, Minnesota wide receiver Ron Kullas and Minnesota-Morris tight end Mike Pagh.

Dungy and Kullas both signed free agent contracts as wide receivers with Pittsburgh and the Vikings respectively. Kimbrough was taken in the third round by Buffalo and Pagh was a late-round choice by Atlanta.

"Tommy's amazing," offered Dungy, who will be tried at wide receiver by Pittsburgh. "I'll bet my house, or at least my parents' house, that he makes it and makes it big."

Dungy, who estimated he has run down about 150 Kramer passes a day, rates the former Rice star as the top quarterback out of college this year.

"I saw most of the top ones in postseason All Star games," said Dungy. "Kramer is better than any of them, although I'm sure I didn't see Joe Roth at his best."

Roth is the former California quarterback who died of cancer in February.

Although he led the nation in passing and total offense last season, Kramer doesn't consider passing a priority in being a good quarterback.

"Being able to move your ball club and get them into the end zone is the measure of a quarterback," explained Kramer. "You have to handle any situation."

His first confrontation with Tarkenton could be interesting since Sir Francis criticized the Vikings for taking a quarterback on the first round of the 1977 draft.

"He's not the general manager," says Kramer. "I read where he said he wasn't going to help train me. Well, I'm sure some of it was probably taken out of context, but I know I can learn by just watching the veterans play the position."

Kramer feels the abundance of receivers in Minneapolis this summer will give him a head start on training camp.

"I know Los Angeles will be out to get Minnesota's blood," noted Kramer about the Vikings initial exhibition test Aug. 6 on the West Coast.

"I wouldn't be surprised if they threw me to the wolves," continued Kramer. "That's what I like though. Nobody wants to sit on the bench."

Relievers have to face pressure hitter," he says. "He has to guess what I'm going to throw. I just throw it."

Relievers, like all athletes, have days when they feel they can't do the job. Tug McGraw says he never let that stop him.

"As long as your arm doesn't hurt, you have to go out there," the Phillies' veteran says. "You can't let a tired arm or a bad head stop you.

Lockwood says he deals with psychological problems he may encounter while warming up. "You have to confront the situation," he says. "A lot of guys try to sweep the problem away. But I'm better off if I meet my problems head to head."

Today's relievers are a contented lot. Whatever happened to the myth that relievers are frustrated or washed-up starters?

"That isn't true anymore," Sutter says. "It might have been that way 10 years ago, but now they're grooming young kids as relievers."

Gossage, who has started during his career, says he enjoys starting but adds he doesn't like to wait four or five days to pitch. "It gets kind of boring between starts," he says. "I like starting but I enjoy pitching more often."

"I didn't like the idea of waiting four days to be a baseball player again," says McGraw, who was a starter as a young pitcher with the Mets. "I find it more exciting getting out of other pitcher's jams every day."

Greenwalds observe golden anniversary

At a garden reception held recently in the home of their niece and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Anderson in Fresno, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Greenwald were feted by their three daughters and son and their families on the occasion of the latter's golden wedding anniversary.

The Greenwalds were married at the Fresno Catholic Cathedral on July 2, 1927. They have resided in the Pomona-Claremont area since 1940, having resided in the northern and central valleys of the state earlier.

They have four children, Mrs. Paul Stein and Mrs. J. D. Scott of Orland, Mrs. Don Lacey of Claremont and Edwin K. Greenwald of Pomona. There are 15 grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren, all residing in California.

At the reception the Greenwalds renewed their marriage vows and the family received a blessing from the Rev. John Echeverra, pastor of St. John's Cathedral.

A surprise presentation, a trip to Hawaii, was made to the couple by their children and families.

The Greenwalds are members of Our Lady of the Assumption Catholic Church and are founders of the Pomona Valley Retail Clerks Association, Local 1428. Mrs. Greenwald is a longtime member and officer of Rancho San Jose Parlor, Native Daughters of the Golden West. Both are active members of the local chapter of Avon Collectors Association.

Feeling for games

How an individual plays tells a great deal about how he thinks and and lives. How much do you know about the psychology of fun and games?

1. The teaser or kidder is usually a "fraidy-cat."
True () False ()

2. Play is a way of coping.
True () False ()

3. Fundamentally, women play today in exactly the same way they did in the past.
True () False ()

4. The individual who can't have fun unless a high element of risk is involved is probably saying something about his sexual identity.
True () False ()

5. The most cautious in play, and in life in general, are the best adjusted and healthiest.
True () False ()

6. Parents who teach their children to always play to win are helping them play the game of life.
True () False ()

7. Athletics builds character, especially in young children.
True () False ()

8. The person who thoroughly enjoys travel and finds trips to foreign lands a super kind of play is probably insecure and anxious at home.
True () False ()

ANSWERS:

1. TRUE. The teaser is often a person who is afraid to express his hostility directly in an intelligent conversation. He teases to disguise what he is afraid to say, or because he is afraid of his sexual drives. He may use teasing to keep people at a distance.

2. TRUE. Play is a way of coping. We can often test the seriousness of a problem by observing how soon it becomes part of a game or a joke. When it is too close and too threatening, man cannot joke about it. Playing and joking indicate that man feels he has some control over the problem.

3. FALSE. The way women play has changed significantly over the past 15 years. They are becoming less embarrassed by their aggression and their needs to compete and excel. In the past, they were discouraged from sports and directed their energies into other diversions.

4. TRUE. Studies have revealed that devotees of extremely hazardous pursuits were less susceptible than others to the charms of the opposite sex. The need for unusual risk in play indicates a need to prove sexual identity. Individuals who are secure in their gender don't have to prove it to themselves or others.

5. FALSE. Neither those who court extreme danger and risk, nor those who are afraid of all risks are apt to be among the best adjusted or healthiest. The best balanced person is apt to follow the middle path.

6. FALSE. French psychologist and linguist, Dr. Jacques-Oliver Grandjouan says that to develop in children the need to win at any cost is to dehumanize them, not in a game, but in life.

7. FALSE. This is a myth destroyed by two California psychologasts, Drs. Bruce Ogilvie and Thomas Tutko, who found that athletic competition has no more beneficial effects than intense endeavor in any other field. Successful athletes, while highly organized and respectful of authority, had a low need to care for others and a low need for affiliation or friendship. They found many athletes so anxious to succeed that they suffered from severe emotional reactions to stress.

8. FALSE. A person who enjoys travel is more apt to be unusually secure and this inner peace allows him to feel comfortable wherever he is. The good traveler also has to be flexible, patient and curious. These are all traits that tend to lead to general happiness.

Lights out

Candle snuffers were not used until the middle of the 18th century, says Hallmark researcher Sally Hopkins: William Perkins, who lived in 1635, scorned such newfangled notions and wrote indignantly to a friend: "If a man is to snuff a candle, he will first spit on his fingers."

Zonta unit sets meeting

William Bruce Lee, CIM classification parole representative to the community release board, will be the speaker at the 7 p.m. meeting, Wednesday, of Zonta Club of Pomona Valley.

The meeting will be held at Pomona Valley Community Hospital cafetorium. Margaret Shepherd will be in charge of the program.

The speaker, who holds a bachelor's degree and has been with the Department of Corrections for 22 years, will discuss "Women in Nutrition."

Its stock is traded over the counter with primary markets being maintained by Dresel Burnham Lambert in Los Angeles, Wagenseller & Durst, Inc. in Claremont and Paine Webber Jackson & Curtis in Riverside.

Weekly Wall Street

Slip in federal index could mean slowdown

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street will be paying special attention to the government's index of leading economic indicators this month and next amid talk of a possible impending slowdown in business activity.

The Commerce Department reported late last month that the index, which is designed as a kind of economic crystal ball, slipped 0.2 per cent in May.

Analysts were quick to point out that it might be only a temporary dip, and the stock market took the news calmly.

But those same analysts also acknowledged that it might be a different story if the decline extended over a period of three months or more.

'As a rule of thumb, many observers construe a one-month negative change as an aberration instead of a harbinger of a lackluster economic future,'' observed Edmund C. Puckhaber, director of research at Dean Witter & Co.

''However, the same observers generally agree that three months of back-to-back drops in this series would point to down-trending business activity.''

Many economists have forecast a slower economic growth rate in the second half of the year than in the first. The question they're debating is whether the dropoff will be just a minor slackening of the pace of a continuing economic recovery, or a more severe slump.

That uncertainty kept the stock market in a cautious mood in the past week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 2.04 to 905.95 over the week's four sessions, sandwiched around an unscheduled holiday Thursday when Wall Street was shut down by a citywide power failure.

Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, meanwhile, rose .39 to 100.18, and the New York Stock Exchange composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks edged up .18 to 54.99.

Big Board volume averaged 23.63 million shares a day, against 20.91 million the week before.

The leading-indicators index is made up of 12 different measures, such as the pace of building permits, the number of companies reporting slower deliveries, and stock market prices.

The June index will be reported on July 29, and the July reading in late August.

Merger talks being held

EL MONTE, Calif. (BW) — Gould Inc. and Hoffman Electronics Corp. announced that they are conducting negotiations for the merger of Hoffman Electronics into Gould.

The basis of the merger would be that 0.31 shares of Gould common stock would be exchanged for each share of Hoffman Electronics. Total shares of Hoffman Electronics presently outstanding are 1,740,899; the number of shares of stock of Gould outstanding is 24,090,496. Hoffman's board will meet to consider the proposal.

Hoffman Electronics, headquartered in El Monte, Calif., with sales of $62.8 million for the year ended Dec. 31, produces avionics systems and audio visual equipment. Gould, headquartered in Rolling Meadows, a suburb of Chicago, is an international developer and manufacturer of electronic and industrial products with annualized sales of $1.5 billion.

New York failure 'local'

NEW YORK (AP) — "It was an improvement, no question about it," said Edward J. Fowlkes of the Federal Power Commission. "If we'd been operating as we were in 1965 we probably would have lost all New York State."

And under the worst possible conditions a good deal more, as far west as roughly the eastern borders of Montana, Wyoming and New Mexico — Texas excepted.

To the west is the western interconnection. Texas is the third one in the national grid. Within each of these three units the various utilities are tied in a bond of interdependence, of share the work.

Generally, this system works well, keeping all the utilities atop the demands made on them. But it is capable of taking them all down together too.

Outages cannot jump from one of the three major interconnections to another. But failures with one of the three systems can affect just one neighborhood, one city, one state, region or an entire system. In that context, New York's failure was localized.

Nevertheless it affected 10 million people in the city itself and in adjoining Westchester County and Long Island, an area housing some of the world's biggest banks, stock exchanges and corporate headquarters, not to mention the United Nations.

It was a paralyzing shock that left the big city's nervous system unable to respond to chores as simple as running an electric toothbrush. Like an arterial stroke, it left New York, already battered, barely able to shuffle along.

After the big blackout of 1965, safeguards were begun against these "run in the stocking" outages. The National Electric Reliability Council was formed and utilities were encouraged to cooperate in their planning.

In addition, working with the commission, utilities developed computer programs for various contingencies, and they tested them.

The resulting greater coordination and increased effectiveness of the interties helped localize the failure, he said. Had Consolidated Edison's area not been "shedded" from the system, more companies might have fallen.

Pacific Lighting Corp. earnings show increase

LOS ANGELES (BW) — Pacific Lighting Corp. (NYSE) has reported second-quarter earnings per share were up slightly over the similar period last year, and for the first six months of 1977 showed an increase of 14 per cent over the similar period of 1976.

The Los Angeles-based utility holding company, whose major subsidiary is Southern California Gas Co., reported second-quarter 1977 earnings of $14,037,000, equivalent after preferred dividends to 54 cents a share of common stock. This compared with $13,641,000, or 53 cents, for the comparable period in 1976.

For the six-month period ended June 30, Pacific Lighting earned $43,747,000, or $1.77, compared with $36,131,000, or $1.55, for the comparable period of 1976.

For the 12 months ended June 30, earnings were $68,583,000, or $2.73, compared with $49,720,000, or $2.13, for the 12 months ended June 30, 1976.

Half of the improvement in six-month earnings over the prior year was contributed by the company's real estate and agricultural operations, chairman of the board Paul A Miller said. Pacific Lighting owns Blackfield Hawaii Corp., Dunn Properties Corp., Fredericks Development Corp. and Pacific Lighting Properties Inc., in the real estate area, and Blue Goose Growers Inc., in agriculture.

For the six-month period, utility earnings showed an improvement over those for the like period in 1976. The gas company's receipts of gas from suppliers during the first six months of 1977 were more than 3 per cent below those of the comparable period in 1976.

Real estate and agricultural earnings during the second quarter continued to show improvement over last year as a result of higher sales and product prices, Miller said.

Second-quarter utility earnings declined chiefly because of reduced sales to low-priority customers and higher costs of operations not covered by utility rates, Miller said.

Southern California Gas previously announced its intention to file soon with the California Public Utilities Commission for a general rate increase. The filing will be chiefly to cover the higher costs at all levels of operation, and to obtain a higher rate of return to support financing of future capital expenditures.

Miller also reported that the 5.2 billion cubic feet of gas lent to eight eastern and midwestern utility companies hard pressed by the severe January and February weather had been returned to Southern California Gas.

The local gas company was in a position to lend the gas to the other utilities because of an exceptionally warm winter in Southern California and its ability to supply its own customers with gas from underground storage.

Revenues and other income in the second-quarter of 1977 were $316,341,000, compared with $285,109,000 during the 1976 period. For the six months ended June 30, revenues and other income were $700,446,000, compared with $589,741,000 for the comparable period a year ago. For the 12 months ended June 30, revenues and other income were $1,284,605,000, compared with $1,159,606,000 for the year ended June 30, 1976.

Polly's Pointers

DEAR POLLY — When baking a chocolate cake, try dusting the greased cake pans with cocoa instead of flour so the dark cake is not spotted on the bottom with white flour. — DALILA.

● © 1977 by NEA, Inc.

DEAR POLLY — Due to the energy crisis, more and more of us are going to be insulating homes. I want to pass on a Pointer to use when doing this yourself. When buying roll insulation for our home, the salesman told us that if we would wash with vinegar after handling this material we would not have that itchy feeling it so often leaves on the hands and arms. — MRS. J.B.

●

Send your helpful hints to Polly's Pointers in care of this newspaper.

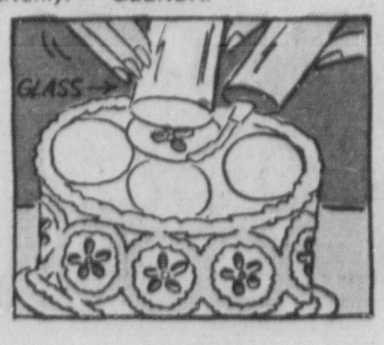
DEAR POLLY — I used to have difficulty winding my watch, as the stem is small and close to the watch and my fingernails are long. Now I use an emery board and it works fine. Saves my nails and does not hurt my watch. — ATHALENE.

●

DEAR POLLY — If an entire cake is too much to use at one time, try placing a few slices on a dish or small tray and freeze. A large tray could be used and each time a cake is baked, add a slice or two. Such a tray really comes in handy. — LOIS.

●

DEAR POLLY — To make your cake decorating look more professional, use a small glass to make precise circles or half circles around the frosted layer cake. Squeeze a flower or initial design in the center and then make a border to cover the circular indentations. Mark the top for circles or scallops by lightly pressing the glass into the frosting that has been lightly marked with dots, so they come out evenly. — GLENDA.



DEAR POLLY — Every morning I need to measure three-fourths cup of oatmeal. I use a round container (it was a potato chip can) that was cut off at the proper place so it holds three-fourths of a cup. This is kept in the oats box, saves motion and is less work than delving for a measuring cup. — MRS. V.C.H.

●

DEAR POLLY — When clay is stuck to a table or chair, try rubbing some of the same clay on it and the stuck clay will usually come off. — VALERIE.

●

DEAR POLLY — When my mother and I sew, we always tape the pattern to the wall by the sewing machine so we can just look up and read the directions as we go along. This comes in very handy. — BETH.

●

DEAR POLLY — To keep shredded foam from sticking to your hands when filling pillows, first rinse your hands and arms up to the elbows with fabric softener and the problem will be solved. — DOROTHY.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the new BBC production of Victor Hugo's classic story, will have its American premiere on NBC, Monday at 9PM.

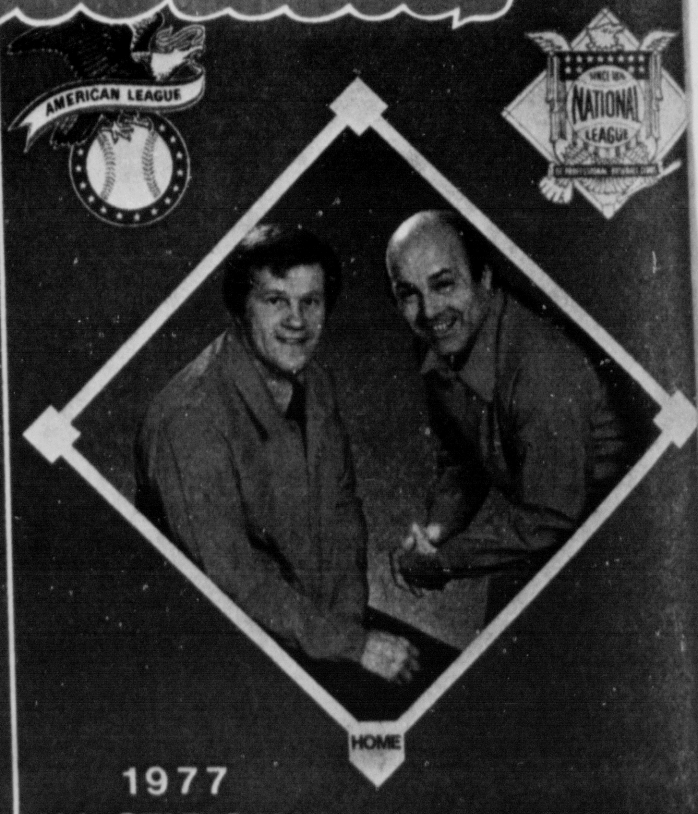
The program marks a continuation of the cooperative agreement between the NBC and the British Broadcasting Corporation, formed nearly four years ago, for the exchange of major dramatic special programs.

The script for the new production, written by Robert Muller, was based on the original Hugo text in an effort to capture the breathtaking sweep and tragic irony of the original story, set in Paris, 1485, during the Feast of Fools.

Warren Clarke plays Quasimodo, the hunchback bellringer at the Cathedral of Notre Dame. Kenneth Haigh portrays Claude Frollo, archdeacon of the cathedral and Quasimodo's foster father. Michelle Newell apears as the beautiful Esmeralda.

Alan Cooke directed, and Cedric Messina produced with Alan Shallcross as script editor.

A Summer Spectacular



ALL-STAR ANNOUNCERS—NBC baseball commentators Tony Kubek (left) and Joe Garagiola (right) will be at the microphones Tuesday at 5PM when NBC presents exclusive live coverage of the 1977 All-Star Baseball Game from Yankee Stadium in New York City. The 1977 All-Star Game marks the 27th year of coverage by NBC and the first time since 1960 that the midsummer classic has been played at Yankee Stadium. Bill Martin (Yankees Mgr.) will manage the American League team and Sparky Anderson (Cincinnati Reds Mgr.) will manage the National League All-Stars.

CLOSE-UP

LIKE FATHER

Noah Beery, who co-stars as James Garner's father, Rocky, in NBC's hit series, The Rockford Files (Fridays at 9PM), was born in the movie business. Son of the late Noah Beery Sr., and nephew of Wallace Beery, one of the industry's first superstars before that term became fashionable, Beery declares: "I couldn't get out of show business if I had wanted to—and I certainly never wanted to despite the pitfalls facing the heir to a famous name."

The senior Beery was a star villain in silent pictures and made the transition into talkies with continued success. "Dad was the classic idea of what the ideal villain should look like. He was big, dark and beetle browed. I escaped that type-casting because I was too young to be a villain when I started."

Pidge Beery (Noah's nickname from childhood) recalls he started acting in a career-wise manner while still at North Hollywood High School, just a stone's throw away from Universal Studios where Rockford is made.

"Long ago I came up with a theory on how to survive in this business, and I've been doing it for about 40 years now," says Beery, adding: "If you want a long career, don't be a Romeo. Be the brother of the girl, or friend of the leading man. Of course, right now, I recommend father of the series star!"

Roles in Westerns or outdoor types such as Beery's character of the retired truck driver on Rockford fit him quite naturally. "I live on a ranch, own a couple of trucks and frequently haul my own cattle to the market," says Beery.

Beery and his second wife, Lisa, truly have the best of two worlds. "We've been married about 10 years and each had a family before we got together. My two sons and a daughter are grown and live in Los Angeles, and Lisa's teenage boys live on the ranch with us," Beery reports.

When working on The Rockford Files which is about six months of the year, the Beerys lease a home on the beach in the Malibu area. They commute to the ranch on weekends. "It's about 125 miles from Hollywood, in the Tehachapi Mountains, and stretches over about 2000 acres. In addition to cattle, they keep goats, chickens, sheep and hogs. The home originally, Beery relates, was an old gasoline station, garage and motel that served travelers on an intercontinental highway. "But the main highway now is some distance away, and the lane to our house is a tricky one and we don't have many folks dropping by," says Pidge, with an element of self satisfaction in his voice.

Though the ranch is huge, and a large portion of it is grazing land, the Beerys utilize a portion for a vegetable and orchard area. "We are self sufficient, and even have our own water supply, something pretty important in California these days. We get water from three natural springs, helped by three windmills," Beery notes.

Despite the work load both on the ranch and in the series, Noah finds time to devote to sculpturing. He has received considerable critical acclaim for his bronze work and he has exhibited at a number of shows, including the Main Trail Gallery in Scottsdale, Ariz. Beery is a devotee of Western artist C.M. Russell and has a large collection of Russell's work. Beery was the honorary chairman, recently, of the C.M. Russell Auction Program at Great Falls, Mont., and narrated a film on Russell at the event.

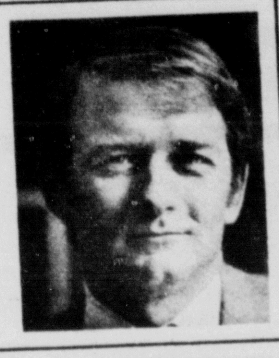
ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.



FOR JODY POWELL, press secretary to President Carter

Has the new informality in the White House detracted from the dignity of the Presidency? —M.C., Huntington, W. Va.

● No. Pomp and circumstance aren't necessary to maintain the dignity of the Presidency. Dignity seems to thrive in a warm, friendly, unstiff air — and that's the atmosphere the President has created.

FOR MELANIE, recording star

Why do people hold candles when you sing? —P.W., Redwood City, Calif.

● It started seven years ago at the Woodstock Festival. I followed Ravi Shankar, who electrified the audience with his sitar playing. While they were yelling for encores, I had to start my act, and his was a tough one to follow. I never thought they'd let me go on. And, to add to my nervousness, it started to rain. Then the rain and the audience calmed down, and a few people held up lit candles. It was supposed to be a sign of solidarity.

FOR ELLA GRASSO, Governor of Connecticut

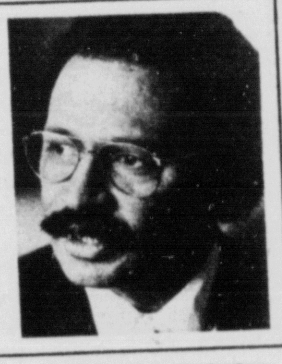
Have you ever been discriminated against because you are a woman? —Joyce Fontana, Enfield, Conn.

● Since I first served in the Connecticut State Legislature in 1952, it has been my good fortune to be accepted as an equal by my male colleagues. But there was one occasion when a hastily called caucus was held in the men's cloak room. After that, more suitable locations were found for the Party caucuses.

FOR PELE, soccer star, New York Cosmos

How does soccer played in the North American Soccer League compare with that played in South America? —B.F., Gallup, N.M.

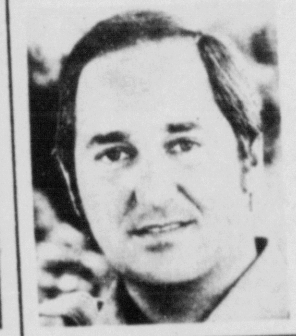
● The real difference is the pace of the game. In Brazil we play with short passes and have offense in mind all the time. So far, I've seen the U.S. develop more like European teams, with defense and body contact. But we in America are starting to get our own blend of soccer, which will be as good as any in the world. After all, the NASL is only 10 years old.



FOR REP. JOHN CONYERS (D.-Mich.)

Since Federal law prohibits receipt or transport in interstate commerce of firearms by convicted felons or mental incompetents, do Federal regulations prevent such persons from purchasing firearms that aren't products of interstate commerce? —Brod Kizzia, Sherman, Texas

● Federal laws and regulations apply only to interstate commerce and to the purchase or receipt of firearms from a Federally licensed dealer. In all other cases, including intrastate transactions, state and local laws apply.



FOR NEIL SEDAKA, songwriter

Any particular reason why you called a song from your new album "Amarillo?" —R.C., Boise, Idaho

● I like the way it sounds, and I also like the place itself, but I think I annoyed the big brass who produced the album. "Amarillo only has 128 people who buy records," they exaggerated. "Why couldn't you write about a big city like Houston instead?"

FOR ELIZABETH POST, etiquette expert

What's the biggest social fluff you've committed? —B.G., Durham, N.C.

● I was having lunch with a dear friend, and we got around to the subject of gift-giving. I spent a long time expounding on how so many people were sending boxes of cheeses for presents. My friend suddenly got very quiet and a sour look settled on her face. I'm sure you can guess the reason: that was the friend who insisted on sending me boxes of cheeses year after year.

FOR ORVILLE SCHELL, author of In the People's Republic

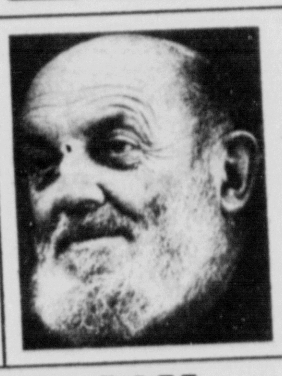
Do the Chinese have a sense of humor? Are they as inscrutable as they're reputed to be? —P.S., Decatur, Ill.

● They do laugh easily, but their humor is strange to foreigners. Quite often, their humor is politically inclined, involving a play on words impossible to convey in another language. The Chinese are rarely cruel, sarcastic or cynical. They never laugh at someone else's expense. Exceptions to this rule are jokes on officially approved enemies; Khrushchev jokes are always popular.

FOR THE "ASK THEM YOURSELF" EDITOR

What can you tell me about Cornelius Ryan, the author of the book upon which the movie A Bridge Too Far is based. —Helen Brenton, Asbury, N.J.

● Although a prolific writer, his books, including The Longest Day, are all nonfiction and relate mainly to war. His greatest feat was probably his fight against his four-year illness. He filled notebooks with more than 500 interviews with doctors, nurses and patients and refused all alleviating medicine; he wanted to finish A Bridge Too Far with a sharp and clear mind. He was in his mid-50's when he died in 1974.



FOR ANSEL ADAMS, one of the world's leading nature photographers

Why did you choose black and white landscape photography over portraiture? —Dick Mack, Carmel, Calif.

● In my professional days, I did all kinds of photographs but, as much of my time was spent in the wilderness, the work with nature took precedence over the usual professional directions. I prefer black and white because of the possibilities of control, and it also allows for great abstraction.

PRO AND CON

Should Postal Service Be Cut To Five Days A Week?

PRO James R. Braughton, Assistant Postmaster General for Delivery Services

We've made no final decision to cut postal deliveries to five days a week, but a Congressionally created study commission did recommend such a move to help keep postage rates down. It would save the Postal Service some $412 million a year, permit holding an anticipated letter-rate increase next year to 15 cents, instead of 16 cents, and would reduce the number of misdelivered letters because we could eliminate using replacement carriers on the regular carriers' days off. A Nielsen survey showed 79 percent of those polled favored elimination of Saturday delivery if it would hold down costs.

CON Robert M. Hawk, director of Transportation and Communication, The Chamber of Commerce of the United States

The Postal Setvice is a traditional element of our society. Reducing its service is never desirable because so many people have come to depend on it. But it's plagued by deficits despite soaring rates and Federal subsidies, and some doubts linger about the quality of its service. Cutting delivery from six to five days a week is proposed as a way to help pare rising costs. If it can demonstrate an ability to reverse the present crisis, then we might consider a five-day plan a viable alternative. But greater efforts must also be made to improve internal efficiency.

WHAT WE ARE LEARNING ABOUT NUTRITION AND THE BRAIN

Charles McVicker

Many researchers believe some forms of mental illness are brought on by nutritional imbalances that can be corrected under medical supervision.

By Gloria Hochman

Nancy C., 29, a Florida housewife, was severely depressed for 10 years. She was hospitalized twice, had two series of electroshock treatments and swallowed hundreds of tranquilizers and antidepressants.

"Nothing helped," says Nancy. "Most mornings I couldn't drag myself out of bed. I couldn't do my housework. I couldn't take care of my children or myself. I was always depressed and, finally, felt there was no out but suicide."

That was three years ago. Today Nancy shows no signs of mental unrest. She works as a legal secretary, cares for her family and says she has "more energy than I ever dreamed possible." She is confident she will never again lapse into mental illness.

Susan R., a 42-year-old secretary living in Riverside, Calif., remembers having serious mental problems most of her life. As a child, she recalls spending a lot of time alone in her room. Playing with other children scared her. "I always had abnormal fears," she says. "I thought people were following me or making fun of me. When I got older, I would pace around the house, almost climbing walls, but afraid to go outdoors. No doctor seemed able to help me. Then I read an article about megavitamin therapy and found a doctor who would treat me. I've been on vitamins for almost a year now, and I can't believe how great I feel. Even my family doctor, who was skeptical, is beginning to feel the treatment has some merit."

Elliot G., who lives in a suburb of New York City, tells a similar story. "I had been in therapy off and on since I was 21," he says. "I had a hard time keeping a job because I would go off into dreamlike episodes. I would lose my sense of time and miss appointments. My memory would fail. My sense of distance and size went berserk. Foods tasted funny. Then I would snap out of it and be O.K. for a while. But it never lasted. I couldn't have a relationship with a woman, and the longest I ever held a job was 11 months. I was finally diagnosed as schizophrenic, and I felt there was no hope for me."

Elliot, now 32, says he feels like a "different person." He has been working in the same ad agency for two years and was recently promoted. He plans to be married in the spring.

Nancy, Susan and Elliot credit their remarkable recoveries to orthomolecular medicine, a popular but controversial branch of medicine that links nutrition to the way the brain functions.

Basically, orthomolecular psychiatrists say that the brain depends on vitamins and minerals to give it the energy it needs to work properly. These determine the brain's delicate chemical balance; if it is disrupted, the way a person thinks, feels and acts can be affected, and insomnia, fatigue, headaches and depression can result. Chemical imbalance can even lead to serious illness, including schizophrenia. Physicians who practice orthomolecular medicine use vitamins, nutrition and drugs to correct the faulty brain chemistry.

These theories are not new, and medical science has been struggling for years to determine the relationship between what people eat and how they behave.

Since the turn of the century, eight medical conditions have emerged from disorders once called schizophrenia. The most notable was pellagra, whose victims, mainly the rural poor, appeared to be mentally ill. Many ended up in institutions for life. In 1937 it was discovered that vitamin B3 (niacin) added to their diet wiped out the disease.

Dr. Walter C. Alverez, emeritus consultant in medicine at the Mayo Clinic, says, "What impresses me greatly is that already we are able to tell, after examining a lot of blood and urine samples, which are from schizophrenics and which are from normal people. That satisfies me that schizophrenia is associated with abnormal chemicals in the patient's body, chemicals that are injuring his brain as much as an overdose of alcohol would." And Harvard Medical School has developed chemical tests which can determine the extent and severity of serious mental illness.

Still, most doctors are not convinced. Many psychiatrists, in particular, insist mental illness is always "psychological" in origin. Other physicians, like Dr. John Paul Brady, chairman of the University of Pennsylvania's psychiatry department, admit there seems to be a biochemical aspect to mental illness but are not sure that treatment with vitamins and nutriments is the answer.

Despite such reservations, people with chronic mental problems ranging from mild depression to psychosis are turning to orthomolecular physicians for help.

The North Nassau Mental Health Center in Manhasset, N.Y., a prominent orthomolecular center, has treated 10,000 patients in the past seven years. The Brain Bio Center in Princeton, N.J., has treated 3,500 patients since 1973. And the Academy of Orthomolecular Psychiatry estimates there are 200 to 300 practitioners around the country. Psychiatrists like Dr. H. L. Newbold of New York City and Dr. Jack Ward of Trenton, N.J., were trained in traditional medicine but later found "nutritional psychiatry" more effective.

Martha E. is a case in point. She says she experienced a "full-blown psychosis. For eight months, I lived in an unreal world. Thoughts raced through my mind with electric speed. It was as though I had turned on 15 radio stations, and they all had static on them. I saw faces in the moon, smelled roses when none was there. Finally, a friend told me about Dr. Carl Pfeiffer (former chief of the Division of Neuropharmacology of the New Jersey Bureau of Research in Neurology and Psychiatry and current director of Princeton's Brain Bio Center), and I called him, insisting on an appointment. Dr. Pfeiffer gave me lots of blood and urine tests and diagnosed me as suffering from low histamine. He gave me a vitamin and mineral prescription and changed my diet. My recovery was amazingly rapid. Three months later, I was working, traveling, dating. I never needed medication. It was all done with nutrition."

Although orthomolecular psychiatrists estimate their cure rate at 80 percent, they are not at all certain about what causes the lopsided chemistry in the first place. Many of them place the blame on faulty nutrition, especially chemical additives and excess sugar consumption. In addition, stress is generally recognized as another trigger of mental illness; a number of studies demonstrate stress alters body chemistry.

Yet millions of Americans are victims of stress and have poor eating habits but never become mentally ill. The difference, says Dr. Philip L. Bonnet, the Brain Bio Center's psychiatrist, is probably inheritance. Bonnet speculates that some persons are born with a greater susceptibility to schizophrenia. Those who are not may pay for their poor eating habits or stressful lifestyles with arthritis, insomnia, depression, anxiety and an inability to concentrate. These and other maladies may not keep them from functioning, says Bonnet, but they do keep people from living up to their potential.

Many orthomolecular doctors thus favor a daily vitamin program. More traditional doctors are skeptical of claims for vitamins, and some believe there could be a danger in overdosing, at least with certain vitamins.

Recognizing that vitamin therapy still bears some stigma of being simply a fad, Bonnet says, "We think most physicians would believe in it if they were willing to examine our evidence. But medicine is a conservative field. Change takes a long time. And doctors are not trained in preventive medicine. Our medical training teaches us to be disease-oriented rather than health-oriented. My own training in psychiatry was traditional, but I became disenchanted with it because patients were not getting well. If only doctors would be more open-minded and give it a chance."

Do you know the difference between Arteriosclerosis and Atherosclerosis? (Both affect blood vessels and they are similar-sounding words, but they are not the same condition.)

Let's face it, doctors frequently assume their patients know what their professional diagnostic language means. But, more often than not, the layman is left "in the dark" wondering, and perhaps needlessly worried, by the frightening sounding terms the doctor uses. The Editors of Better Homes and Gardens feel there should be no mystery about any medical term, provided you have a clear, easy-to-understand explanation of what it means. And that is exactly what you get in your illustrated Encyclopedia of Medical Terms Section.

Here are 2,000 definitions to help you talk with ease and confidence to your physician . . . and understand exactly what his medical terminology means when he talks to you. Matters you may have hesitated to discuss – even with your doctor – no longer need be embarrassing, once you are able to describe them in clear, scientific language.

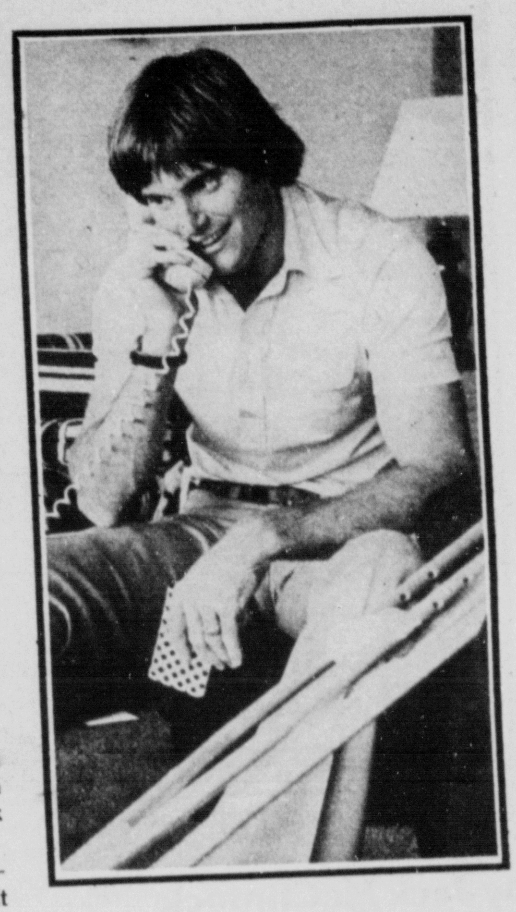
WHAT A FAMILY!

The Jenners: Olympic decathlon champ Bruce, his wife Chrystie, their Labrador retriever named Bertha and her puppies. Here's the story of their remarkable partnership.

Photos by Peter C. Borsari

With incredible dedication and a lot of understanding and encouragement from his wife, Bruce won the title of "world's greatest athlete." Now, besieged with fame and fortune, they are struggling to retain control of their destinies while pursuing new goals.



By Joseph N. Bell

He lives in Malibu, high on a hilltop overlooking the Pacific. Two new Porsches are in the garage, and a dog barks somewhere inside the house. Bruce Jenner answers the door on crutches, one leg bent in a hip-to-ankle cast. Despite the crutches he mounts the stairs effortlessly, explaining to his visitor, with mild embarrassment, how his motorcycle jumped out from under him. He came down on his right knee and cracked the fibia and tore a mass of tendons. "It won't be back to normal for a year, but I don't care. I'm in no rush. If I were still competing, I wouldn't have been on the bike in the first place. I wouldn't even walk up and down stairs fast two years ago."

There was good reason. The stakes were high. When Jenner won his last race in Montreal's Olympic Stadium in the dusk of July 30, 1976, he became world record holder in the Olympic decathlon and winner of the Amateur Athletic Union's prestigious Sullivan trophy. He was widely acclaimed as the "world's greatest athlete."

He's lean and supple and, at 26, has an air of easy confidence, a square jaw and earnest eyes that look straight at a listener. None of this has been lost on the Hollywood types who have flocked around. But so far, Jenner and his cool, Dresden-pretty wife, Chrystie, have kept tight control over their affairs.

Jenner is often compared with Mark Spitz, whose plans to capitalize with commercials and endorsements on his 1972 Olympic performance were never really fulfilled. Jenner says he "saw what happened to Mark," and wants to avoid the same unproductive route.

A desire to control their own destinies has characterized both Bruce and Chrystie most of their lives. The son of a tree surgeon, Bruce was raised in several small upstate New York towns where he excelled in all sports. He went to Graceland College in Iowa and intended to concentrate on football. Then his knee was shattered in practice a month into his first season. He never played football again, turning exclusively to track when he recovered.

Bruce was in his first decathlon in 1970 and knew instantly it was what he wanted to do "because there were so many things to improve in." He was not a natural champion in any event, so bringing his scores up was tough, slogging work. He put all his energy into making the U.S. Olympic team in 1972.

"My goal was finishing in the first ten — and I just made it. The biggest thing the '72 Games gave me was experience. When I went back four years later, I was familiar with the pressures and no longer in awe of all the things going on around me. I could concentrate totally on winning."

That meant four years of training with his eye fixed firmly on a single goal. Chrystie knew this when she married Bruce a few months after the '72 Olympics. It was agreed she would work as an airline stewardess to supplement his part-time insurance-selling job so Bruce could devote himself to training. "It wasn't a difficult decision," she says. "I've never aspired to a lot of money, so my salary and a little help from his work were enough."

He trained out of his home in San Jose, where his coach and trainer was a Labrador retriever named Bertha, who kept him solidly on schedule whenever he was tempted to sleep in. "She trained every minute with me. When I'd ignore the alarm in the morning, she'd straddle me on the bed and breathe on my face until I got up. She was definitely a motivating factor all those years. I felt guilty if I didn't take her out to run."

Although Bruce's performance improved steadily, there were some serious problems along the way. Says Chrystie: "The one-dimensional element in his personality really bothered me. That's changing now, and he's growing; whole new worlds are opening to him. We knew he had to be one dimensional then to succeed, but it could be frustrating. When he hurt himself in 1973, right after we moved to California, he had no job, no friends, and he couldn't do the one thing he was dedicated to. He had to be so narrow he didn't even have a hobby to fall back on. That's the risk you take for a single-minded goal."

A curious switch took place in their positions during Bruce's last year in training. It hit Bruce suddenly in 1975 that he was not prepared emotionally for the possibility of losing. "So," he says, "I got scared, and I really started to prepare myself to lose. I kept telling myself that I musn't put all my eggs in this one basket — and I could see my performance going straight down." So could Chrystie. The two of them sat up talking for several nights about what to do. And suddenly it was Chrystie who was saying: "That's no way to win. Face it. Admit to yourself that the decathlon gold medal is the one thing in the world you want right now. Get that hunger back." He did — and a month later set a world's record, then went on to Montreal for his spectacular victory there.

Bruce knew long before the final event of the Olympic decathlon that he would never compete again. "That sense of finality gave me a lot of strength. When I walked off the victory stand and I looked back at that packed stadium, I said to myself, 'That's it' — and I felt very good about it. I was ready for new challenges."

They came quickly — and massively. A few days after his final victory, there were some large and instant offers for one-shot commercials. The Jenners turned them all down and set up an organization that included a large talent agency and a prominent firm of publicists.

For three months, the Jenners sorted and discussed various offers that poured in. Then they made a 10-year deal with a breakfast food that will underwrite lecture tours for Bruce and a program of juvenile sports activities. His "deals" now include a two-year arrangement with ABC-TV as a sportscaster, plus Bruce's own endorsement insignia, which he has so far licensed to a shoe manufacturer and several lines of clothing for young people.

He was asked to test for the title role in the $25 million movie of Superman, and he plans to do some dancing on a Donnie and Marie show in the fall and will probably attend acting school. He will continue to give college and business groups his motivation lecture, which concludes with a film clip in slow motion against a musical backdrop of "The Impossible Dream" of Bruce winning the 1,500-meter race. For such talks he now commands between $2,500 and $5,000 per appearance. To the occasional irritation of the professionals who manage Bruce's career, Chrystie participates in every business decision. She's the enforcer when people don't pay up for Bruce's appearances ("I don't mind being the heavy; I don't feel we have to compromise with the irresponsible ways of people who deal with us.") and the devil's advocate when Bruce's handlers are trying to sell him on a course of action.

"I know," she says firmly, "That Bruce's manager and agents chuckle about the fact that they have to clear it through Chrystie first, but that's O.K. We're in control...we'll still make the last decision. We're in a terribly powerful business now, and if the power exists outside us and not within us, we're in trouble. We listen, but we don't delegate. We're not kids. We can do just fine."

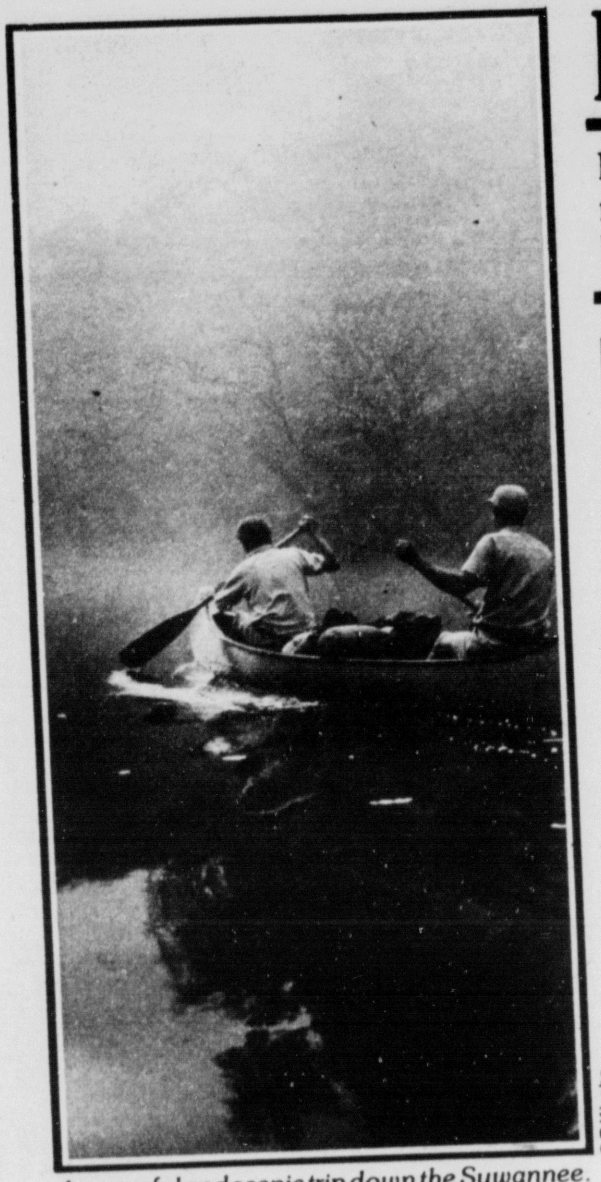
RIDING A RIVER

It's a unique experience, whether you tackle the raging white water of the Colorado in a kayak or lazily float down the scenic Suwannee in a canoe.



C.T. Wyche

A peaceful and scenic trip down the Suwannee.

By Jack McClintock

A river vacation gives you everything: water and fishing, spectacular views, exercise and even — if you take along your bird book — an education. On a river you feel the clean heat of the sun and the refreshing shock of cold splashes from water that not long ago may have been snow. A river, says Claude Terry, the microbiologist and outfitter who took Jimmy Carter down the Chatooga where Deliverance was filmed, is "a staircase set in stone and carpeted with running water." And the sport of running a river has grown tremendously since Americans first saw Robert F. Kennedy rafting down the Colorado a dozen years ago.

There are two basic kinds of river trips: One can drift placidly on a tranquil, scenic stream, watching birds and taking pictures, or choose the challenge of white water.

In most cases you have a choice of conveyance, too: canoe, kayak, raft, even inner tubes. (There's nothing like lashing a dozen big truck tubes together, tossing a netful of cold drinks into one, and floating with your friends for miles in something cool like the Suwannee.) Your choice of transport depends mainly on temperament — whether you prefer comfort or adventure, tranquility or excitement. Most exciting — and most individualistic — is the kayak, but handling it takes practice, and you can't carry much.

In a raft you can carry lots, and rafts are safer. Their disadvantage is that, after a few miles, one tends to envy the people in kayaks and canoes. The canoe is still the most flexible and popular river vehicle, and it "continues to be the most logical craft for adventure," says John Malo in his book, Wilderness Canoeing. You can take a friend, carry plenty of gear, even sleep in a canoe. And on a quiet river a canoe is safe. If you enjoy danger, on the other hand, nothing beats white-water canoeing.

Proper gear and a bit of study beforehand (Malo's book is good, and there are others) are helpful if you haven't been on a river before, especially on one where you'll encounter more action than the occasional riffle. On white water, helmets, life jackets and sneakers are essential.

The best way to start is with a commercial trip, using rented equipment and a guide. This costs

If you think an economy car would put you in a compromising position, look again.

With a Volkswagen you could actually wind up with more room and comfort than you have now.

Our Dasher, for example, comes in a beautifully appointed 2-door hatchback or 4-door sedan, with fully reclining bucket seats, plush carpeting, and enough room for five passengers.

In fact, the Dasher beats just about every car in its class in combined interior room and trunk space. And in a wagon, it has more cargo area than any car in its class.*

Then there's our Rabbit, which has been catching everyone by surprise. Even Detroit.

To start with, it takes off like a shot.

With acceleration from 0 to 50 mph in an amazing 7.7 seconds. (That's faster than a Triumph Spitfire.) And with front-wheel drive that literally pulls you around corners. It also has more room for about $25 a day per person (lunch often included), and it gives you a chance to learn to "read" the water and to practice paddle strokes. After one or two of these trips, and some homework, one is ready to plan an independent trip. Here are some rivers that offer fine canoeing, kayaking and rafting.

West In California, the Colorado, Eel, Klamath, Scott, Smith, Trinity and Van Duzen rivers are excellent. The Sierra Club and Mountain Travel Inc. are reliable outfitters. In Montana the Yellowstone, Madison, Big Hole and Missouri rivers are good, and portions of the Missouri are unchanged since Lewis and Clark paddled it while seeking the Northwest Passage to the Pacific. In Wyoming the Snake is famous, and in Idaho, the classic is the Salmon River — "The River of No Return." (In the West, some trips are being curtailed because of the drought, so a precheck is in order.)

Northeast. Maine is still largely undeveloped and a river-runner's paradise. It's best may be the St. Johns, offering a 201-mile run from Northeast Carry to Fort Kent, which is, conveniently, the terminus of U.S. highway I, which starts in Key West. In Pennsylvania, the North Branch of the Susquehanna, from the New York State line to Tunkhannock, is one of the finest canoeing streams in the East, and it is accessible from a half-dozen big cities.

Shooting a rapid with a group in a rubber raft, or alone in a kayak, is an unforgettable experience. Taking on violent white water in a kayak, however, is not for beginners.

Anne Hodgson

Ervin Jackson

Midwest. Missouri has dozens of beautiful rivers, and in Minnesota, which has 13,000 miles of inland rivers, there is some of the finest canoeing in the world. The best may be in the Superior-Quetico Forest, a joint U.S.-Canada preserve with 400,000 acres of virgin forest and a labyrinth of lakes and meandering streams. Leave from Grand Garais, Ely or Crane Lake.

South. The Chatooga offers breathtaking white-water adventure, and at least three outfitters run trips from northeast Georgia and North and South Carolina. (Southeastern Expeditions, the Nantahala Outdoor Center and Wildwater Inc.) There are quieter rivers, too, like the Chattahoochee. The Suwannee in Georgia and Florida is serenely beautiful. For an unusual river trip, try the "River of Grass" — Florida's Everglades. Guided canoe trips leave every Thursday morning from Everglades City.

Far North. Real adventure in the Northwest Territories of Canada can be found on the MacKenzie River, 1,000 navigable miles and a major highway to the Arctic, from Great Slave Lake to the Beaufort Sea, with many signs of ancient Indians and Eskimos along the way.

For further information write the state Departments of Natural Resources in the states you wish to visit or the U.S. Department of the Interior in Washington. (Ask about the Wild and Scenic River Systems.) Also located in Washington are The Wilderness Society (1901 Pennsylvania Ave. N.W. 20006) and the American Forestry Association (919 17th St. N.W. 20006). They both run guided river trips.

people than 25 other cars you could buy (including Monza, Mustang II, Pinto, Toyota Celica, and Datsun B-210). And more room for luggage than 53 other cars. (Would you believe, with the rear seat folded down it can hold 21 bags of groceries. And with the seat folded up it still has more trunk space than a Cadillac Seville.)

Finally, we come to Scirocco, our true sports car that gives you extravagance and plain good sense at the same time.

Last year Scirocco was the Trans Am Champ for cars under 2 liters. And speaking of style, the Scirocco was just named one of the "25 best-designed factory-made products available in America today" by Fortune Magazine.

It also gives you something few sports cars can offer: room for four and more trunk space than a Ford LTD II.

Yet (amazingly!) a Scirocco has the same fuel economy as a Rabbit.

Both Scirocco and Rabbit get 37 mpg on the highway and 24 mpg in the city. Dasher gets 36 mpg highway, 24 mpg city. (Of course, these are EPA estimates with standard transmissions. Your mileage may vary depending on how and where you drive, optional equipment and your car's condition.)

With all this going for our Volkswagens, we suggest you stop in to your Volkswagen dealer for a test sit.

It's one way to get through the energy crisis without getting bent out of shape.

Economy without sacrifice.

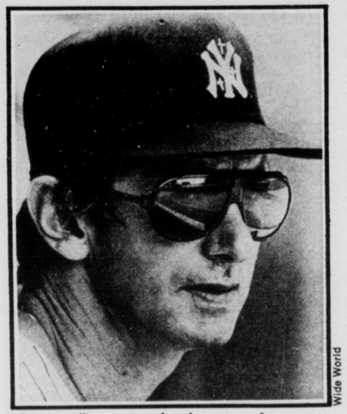
INSIDE THE MIND OF A MANAGER



Wide World

Martin will manage the American League in Tuesday's nationally televised All-Star clash.

How does he steal the opposing team's signs, know when a pitcher is tiring or figure out what type of pitch a batter is expecting? Field general Billy Martin candidly reveals the subtleties of running a major league baseball team from the dugout.

By Neal Ashby

From sandlot days, Billy Martin has been dashing, daring and all-too-eager to use his fists. Time after time, his rage has boiled to the surface. Just last month he did it again when he pulled slugging right fielder Reggie Jackson out of a Yankee game in Boston. Martin tore into Jackson for not putting enough effort into fielding a ball. When Jackson answered back, Martin lunged for him and had to be restrained by his coaches.

Back in 1957, Martin and some other Yankees got into a nightclub row, causing Martin to be traded away to the National League. With the Cincinnati Reds in 1960, Martin "blew" over close pitches by Chicago Cubs hurler Jim Brewer, threw his bat at Brewer then punched him in the face.

While managing the Minnesota Twins in 1969, Martin interceded in a nightclub brawl between two of his star players and flattened one of them, pitcher Dave Boswell. The Twins finished first in their division, but Martin was not rehired for 1970. He was fired before the end of his third season as manager of the Detroit Tigers in 1973, despite a consistent winning record and one division championship. General manager Jim Campbell indicated Martin was just too difficult. It was the same story with the Texas Rangers in 1975, though he had turned around the team's performance.

"You play this game to win," Billy Martin says. "I can't tolerate anything less than a total effort to do it." One day in the Yankee dugout earlier this season Martin spoke to FAMILY WEEKLY about the finer points of the game.

"We have a code in baseball for our signs. Touching the head is 1; face, 2; neck, 3; chest, 4; hands, 5; belt, 6; legs, 7. If you see a manager giving 1-7-3 to the third base coach and the coach repeating that to the batter and the batter bunts on the next pitch, then you've got their bunt sign. Of course, as they give the sign they're going through a lot of other numbers to throw you off; you have to figure out which ones are the real ones.

"There's another way coaches can give away that some special play is on," says Martin. "When something is 'on,' a coach might give the signs fast, trying to keep the other team from 'reading' them, but give them slower if there's nothing really on.

"Another time you might call for a pitchout," says Martin, still slim and youthful-looking at 48, "is when you see something that makes you think an opposing runner on first base is going to try to steal second. Say your pitcher throws over to first to hold the runner close to the base, and you notice just then that the runner is leaning a little toward second. That may mean he's getting ready to steal, and if you pitch out, the catcher may be able to fire the ball to one base or the other and catch the runner in between."

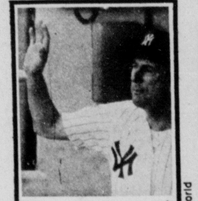
Infielders, Martin points out, often indicate what kind of pitch the catcher has signaled for by the way they position themselves. The difference may be only a couple of steps, but moving to the infielders' right (with a right-handed batter) may mean fastball because the batter is likely to get the bat around quickly if he swings, and a shift to the left may signify curve ball because the hitter will probably swing later. The manager can alert his batters to watch for these moves by infielders for an indication of what kind of pitch to expect.

Pitchers may give away the pitches they're throwing, using a continuous arm motion when throwing a straight fastball, or stopping momentarily as they twist their wrist for a curve.

Pitchers also reveal when their arms are tiring by becoming "wild high," according to Martin. "They try to reach back and get a little extra on the pitch to make up for their fatigue, and that makes it harder for them to control the pitch and keep it low to the batter, where it's harder for most of them to hit cleanly. If the opposing pitcher is doing it, you can alert your batters to watch for high pitches. If it's your pitcher, it's probably time to take him out of the game."

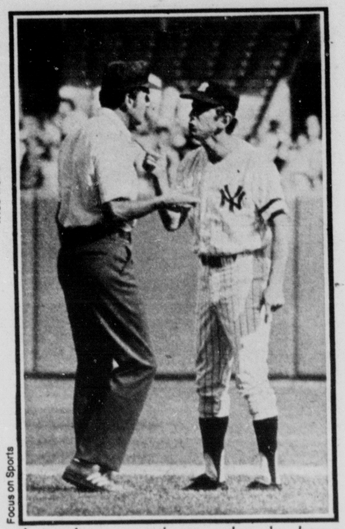
Martin even watches the umpires when they're calling plays to see if they're in the best position to see the action.

"Sure," he says, "because if the umpire is not in a position to see the play clearly, that's when you have a good argument if his decision goes against your team."



Wide World

He runs his team with signs from the dugout.



Focus on Sports

A good manager knows when he has a chance of winning an argument with an umpire.

Batters may reveal their hope of getting a swing at a curve ball before it breaks by moving forward in the batter's box. "If I see that," reveals Martin, "I have my pitcher throw closer to the batter, so he can't get the bat around on the curve before it breaks."

Managers must also look for the man who is beginning to show his age. "In the field," advises Martin, "you see it in his range. He just doesn't get to balls he used to be able to handle. Balls get through for hits that should be outs. In batting, the man isn't as quick in swinging the bat. If you see that, you might pitch him more fastballs, which can get by him faster."

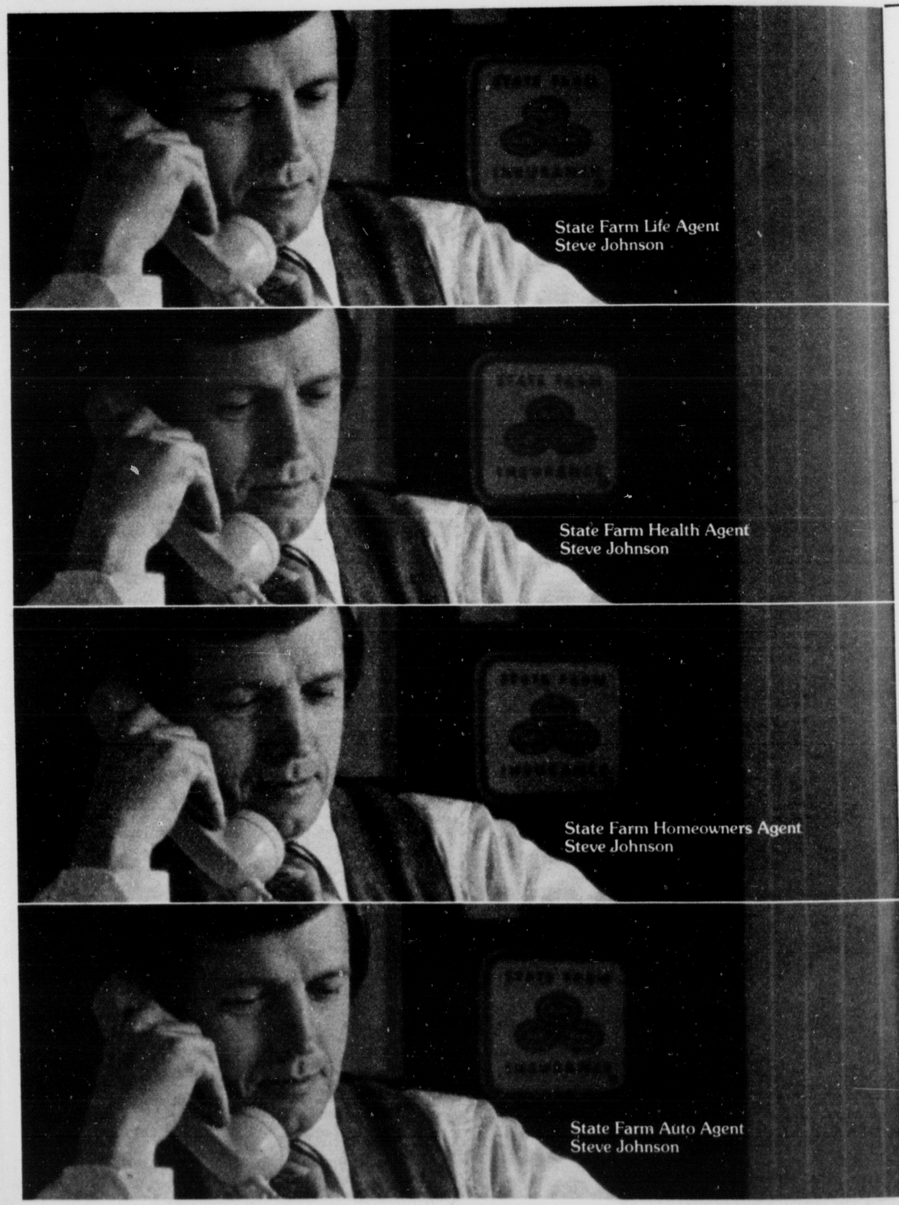
Martin uses the time between innings to good advantage. Some managers stay aloofly superior down at one end of the bench. Martin strolls back and forth in the dugout, talking with his men, keeping them happy and looking for "that chance to teach something."

These days, the major league manager goes to the bench armed with a lot of information about the opponents. "Reports come into my office every week, either written or on the phone, from our three scouts around the country watching the teams we're going to be playing soon."

Martin takes his brief case off a table and pulls out some papers. "These are the written reports," he says. "They have filled-in blanks for each player's times at bat, and for general comments." The reports advise Martin on how the Yankees should pitch to each man on the other team, who will try to steal and the counts they'll go on, who will bunt and what count they bunted on, how to arrange fielders to defense each batter and who is "hot" with the bat.

"There isn't anything the other team has been doing that we don't know about. This game is a lot more complicated now than the general public realizes.

"You just have to stay on top of things," Martin concludes. "Don't let the little things get by you. That's the way to win. Details. Keeping track of the little things and not missing a thing that happens on the field."



When it comes to family insurance, Steve Johnson is one of a kind.

Jeanne and Bob Beals of Chesapeake, Virginia, are extremely happy with their life insurance agent.

They're very pleased with their health insurance agent.

They're completely satisfied with their homeowners agent.

"And we know our car insurance man is the best around," Bob says. "We feel fortunate to have him so close by."

Of course, whatever the Beals think about one agent, they're bound to think about the others.

Because all of them are State Farm agent, Steve Johnson. As a family insurance specialist, Steve can provide knowledgeable advice and person-to-person service on all the policies they're ever likely to need.

"If we have any question about our coverages, or a claim, we don't have to wonder who to call," says Jeanne. "We just call Steve. It's a real advantage having one agent nearby who can help us with everything."

Having a State Farm family insurance man can be a real advantage for you.

He's the one agent who's backed by America's largest homeowners and auto insurer, and one of the largest life insurance companies, too.

And there's probably one like Steve Johnson in your neighborhood. Check your Yellow Pages.

SISSY SPACEK'S STRANGE ROAD TO STARDOM

Although best known for her weird and terrifying roles, off-screen this young star radiates homespun warmth.

By Patricia Baum

Sissy Spacek has played every weirdo in the book. Just these past few months — dubbed "Sissy Spacek Season" by movie buffs — she's played the spooky teenager with telekinesis in Carrie, a spaced-out maid in Welcome to L.A. and a drab girl who assumes her roommate's personality in Three Women. All in all, a funny way to arrive at success. Yet at 27, Sissy Spacek has definitely arrived. She was named Best Actress of 1976 by the National Society of Film Critics, has received an Oscar nomination and is now being hailed as one of Hollywood's most promising young stars.

Although on-screen she wallows in the weird, Sissy is not the least bit kooky. With her Texas twang, innocent blue eyes, long blond hair and sunny freckles, she radiates a homespun warmth. Her views and values are down-to-earth.

Sissy's affecting wholesomeness springs naturally from her background. She was raised in the small town of Quitman, Texas, where her father was a county agricultural agent, and she was showered with love and affection. "I can remember Mom and Dad peeking in at my brothers and me in our bedrooms," she says, "and cooing over how beautiful and smart we were. With that kind of devotion I always felt very secure."

Today Sissy prefers the kinky over the straight roles because of their challenge.

"It's hard finding something likable about a creep and then making her sympathetic," she says. If necessary, Sissy will go to elaborate lengths to land these parts. For the Carrie screen test, "I put Vaseline in my hair and wore my little blue sailor dress from seventh grade. I really looked — and felt — funky and ugly."

Once she has a role, she is not one to sit back complacently. Sissy begins her unique ritual of turning herself into the character by donning white painter's clothes to totally erase herself and then by employing any other technique that will transform her into the other person. During the filming of Carrie, Sissy kept a box under Carrie's bed similar to the metal fishing-tackle box of secret belongings she herself had as a child. To feel like an outcast, she made a point of not fraternizing with the other actors.

Although her involvement adds realism to her roles, it has its drawbacks. "Sometimes," she admits, "I can't shake the characters off when I'm through with the film. After Carrie I kept cringing and withdrawing whenever I met people. I started to panic because my next film, Three Women, was looming so close. To exorcise Carrie I had to travel a lot and go on fasts to expose myself to new feelings."

Sissy began her acting career after a family tragedy During her senior year in high school, a brother died of leukemia. The loss "blew a hole in everything and made me aware that we don't always have as much time as we suppose." To "get out from underneath," she moved to New York to pursue a singing career.

Recalling those early days with disbelief, Sissy says, "There I was, this skinny little girl with a big guitar and patent leather shoes. I was a blank page. With each group of people I met I tried to be whatever I felt they needed. I had no opinions about what furniture I liked or anything else. I didn't even know that making it as a singer was supposed to be a struggle, that every kid in America had the same idea."

She sang in nightclubs, did background vocals for commercials and later studied acting. Her first notable movie was Badlands, and during the filming of it she met her future husband Jack Fisk, a talented art director. It was Carrie, however, that put Sissy on the map.

Sissy now plans to branch out into more mature roles. "I feel lucky to have played young girls so long," she says. "But I'm tired of being grouped with Tatum O'Neal and Jodie Foster. And it's getting hard for me to remember what I was like at 14. I'm married now and feeling more womanly. And I want to play parts more relevant to my life today."

HOLDS DENTURES FIRM WITHOUT DAILY "FIXINGS"

Snug Cushions hold dentures comfortably tight for weeks

No more "fixings" every morning with messy powders or creams. Even if dentures need "fixing" after every meal, here's important news. Snug cushions restore dentures' holding power so dentures stay comfortably tight for weeks. Snug, the soft, effective temporary aid, forms a "comfort bond" between dentures and gums. Sticks to dentures, not to gums. Rinse, scrub or soak Snug fresh and clean. Easy to remove, but won't wash off or flake away. So, end daily "fixings"! Use Snug to hold dentures comfortably tight for weeks.

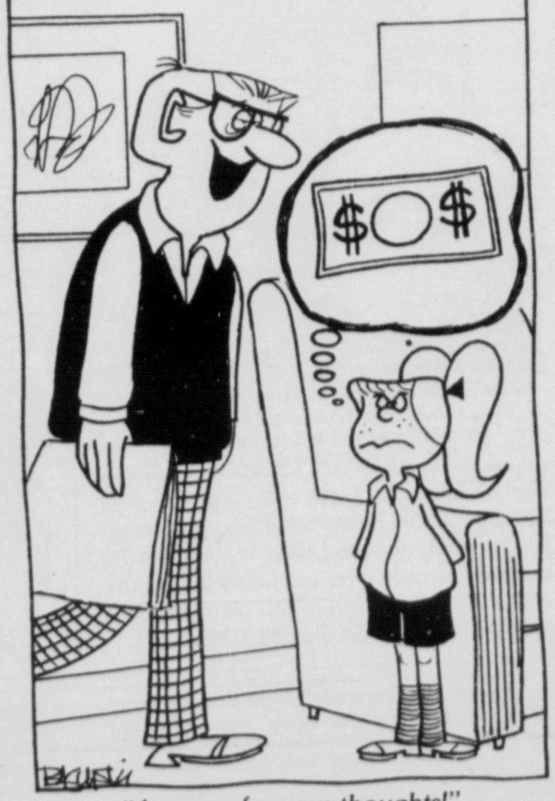
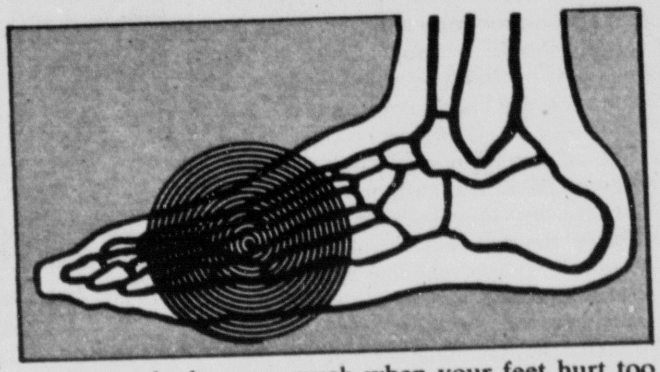
LITTLE EMILY



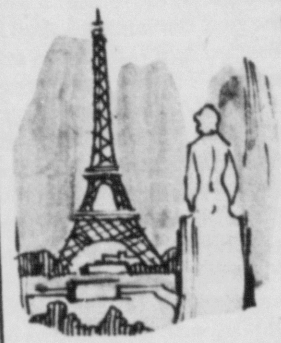
"A penny for your thoughts!"

My Feet Were Killing Me ...Until I Discovered the Miracle of Hamburg!



It was the European trip I had always dreamed about. I had the time and money to go where I wanted—see what I wanted. But I soon learned that money and time don't mean much when your feet hurt too much to walk. After a few days of sightseeing my feet were killing me.

Oh, I tried to keep going. In Paris I limped through Notre Dame and along the Champs-Elysées. And I went up in the Eiffel Tower although I can't honestly say I remember the view. My feet were so tired and sore my whole body ached. While everybody else was having a great time, I was in my hotel room. I didn't even feel like sitting in a sidewalk cafe.



The whole trip was like that until I got to Hamburg, Germany. There, by accident, I happened to hear about an exciting breakthrough for anyone who suffers from sore, aching feet and legs.

This wonderful invention was a custom-made foot support called Flexible Featherspring. When I got a pair and slipped them into my shoes my pain disappeared almost instantly. The flexible shock absorbing support they gave my feet was like cradling them on a cushion of air. I could walk, stand, even run. The relief was truly a miracle.

And just one pair was all I needed. I learned that women also can wear them—even with sandals and open backed shoes. They're completely invisible.

Imagine how dumbfounded I was to discover that these miraculous devices were sold only in Europe. Right then I determined that I would share the miracle I discovered in Hamburg with my own countrymen.

Today thousands of Americans of all ages—many with foot problems far more severe than mine—have experienced this blessed relief for themselves.

Here's why Featherspring work for them and why they can work for you. These supports are like nothing you've ever seen before. They are custom fitted and made for your feet alone! Unlike conventional devices, they actually imitate the youthful elastic support that Nature originally intended your feet to have.

Whatever your problem—corns, calluses, pain in the balls of your feet, burning nerve ends, painful ankles, old injuries, backaches or just generally sore, aching feet. Flexible Featherspring will bring you guaranteed relief with every step you take.

Don't suffer pain and discomfort needlessly. If your feet hurt, the miracle of Hamburg can help you. Write for more detailed information. There is no obligation whatsoever. Just fill out the coupon and mail it today.

WHAT IN THE WORLD...

A Buyer's Guide To Furniture

• Before leaving your house, review your needs — where you live, how you live, the ages and number of people in your family, the amount of entertaining you do at home, the spaces in which the furniture will be placed, the colors you already have in the room to be furnished.

• If there is a lot of traffic in the room, or you have young children, steer clear of natural colors and buy a fabric that has a tight weave and cleans easily. In addition, make construction of your upholstered furniture a prime consideration:

1. There should be no squeaks in the frame. Test for them by sitting down and pushing yourself back quickly. Test the seat to make sure you do not feel springs. If the springs are set properly, you'll sit the same way every time. The cushions should not fall toward the center, sink at the arms or collapse under your legs.

2. Check for proper padding by lifting the seat cushions and feeling the deck. Run your hands over the arms, especially the edges, to determine whether they are properly padded. You should not feel any of the frame. You also should feel padding when you run your hands over the outside of the couch.

3. Be sure cushions are not uniformly flat. Bulkiness assures that the fabric has been webbed over the foam filling and reduces the possibility of the weave of the fabric becoming unnecessarily strained.

4. Contemporary pieces should be on casters. Feel beneath the couch for cambric covering. The interior should not be exposed.

5. Look for labels telling content, durability and cleaning instructions.

6. Look for arm caps on a good couch, included at no extra charge.

An Expert Doles Out Allowance Information

It isn't easy for parents to decide how much allowance to give their children. The first question, of course, is whether your children should get an allowance. Most family counselors say yes. "I feel kids should have an allowance to help teach them the value of money, how to save, even how to plan ahead," says Jane Brueck, supervisor of family services for the Family Counseling Center in St. Petersburg, Fla. At what age should parents start giving their children an allowance? "When kids learn to count, as young as 4 or 5, I think it's time to give them an allowance — even if it's a quarter or less," says Ms. Brueck. "As the child gets older, his allowance should be slowly increased." Deciding when to start giving children an allowance may not be as difficult as determining how much money they should get. "The amount is not as important as the decision-making process behind it. Parents should enter into a dialogue with their child, discuss how much money he thinks is necessary to get along," Ms. Brueck advises. She also thinks "the family should sit down and discuss allowances in light of their financial situation. Children's allowances should fit the family budget."

Are Supermen And Wonder Women Insecure?

According to a Stanford Univ. psychologist, supermasculine men as well as superfeminine women usually think poorly of themselves. Moreover, they score lower on intelligence tests than their more androgynous counterparts (those with a mixture of masculine and feminine traits). Dr. Sandra Bern classified 1,500 Stanford student volunteers by their preferences among 60 traits — 20 "masculine" (e.g., ambitious, self-reliant, assertive), 20 "feminine" (affectionate, gentle, understanding) and 20 "neutral" (friendly, likable, truthful). In follow-up tests, she found that those who had scored in the masculine and feminine extremes showed less self-assurance, more anxiety and more neurotic conflict, and they tended to score lower on I.Q. and creativity tests. "An androgynous personality," says Dr. Bern, "allows one to be independent and tender, assertive and yielding. It expands the range of behavior open to a person."

How To Put People At Ease

Putting people at ease is a basic step in getting them to react favorably toward you, says Dr. Arnold Lazurus, a psychologist at Rutgers Univ. He offers these suggestions:

• Let people hear your voice — don't just nod. The sound of the voice is like a calling card or introduction.

• Avoid talking too much or too little. If you tend to be too quiet, use more words. You'll find that other people will loosen up. And if you're a compulsive talker, try to summarize. Others often like to hold the floor themselves.

• Use the word "I" in your conversation. You're much less of a mystery when you disclose something about yourself.

• Look for something you can comment on positively. Pick something that you genuinely like about the other person and point it out to him.

• Be able to laugh at yourself. If you tell a story in which you don't come out in a particularly good light, you'll immediately see other people warm up to you. They'll feel at ease because they have undoubtedly suffered similar discomforts.

• Let your face express your feelings. If it is a mask, you're not going to put anybody at ease. If you're pleased about something, show your feelings.

• Make eye contact with the other person. Looking up at the ceiling or down at the floor while speaking makes your listener feel ill at ease.

• If you disagree, attack the idea rather than the person. You might say, "I disagree with that idea," but don't say anything that implies, "You are wrong for thinking that."

A Child In The Hospital

A child in the hospital faces anxieties and concerns, "but for a number of children hospitalization can be a remarkably positive experience," says child psychologist Phyllis Magrab, Ph.D. "What parents do before, during and after for their child can make the difference." Preparing a child of any age is important, she says, preferably with a hospital visit ahead of time. If that's not possible, prepare the child with an explanation of where he's going, why and what to expect. It's best to stay with young children, who need assurance that they are not being abandoned. Other tips:

1. Don't let anxiety be transferred to the child. For example, don't break bad news in front of him until you have time to gather your own strength to give an explanation.

2. Set priorities and rely on friends and family to help so you can spend time with your child.

3. Establish trust and be honest about what will and will not hurt.

4. Listen with understanding to your child and let him talk. Treat older children as a "partner" with you in their illness problems.

5. Overvisiting is bad, and visitors should be those people who are important in the child's life. Your friends can give you support in a visit outside the child's room.

Loss of Hearing: A Growing Problem

More Americans have been suffering from hearing loss in recent years because of increased noise pollution, yet not many people realize the seriousness of constant exposure to noise. David P. Goldstein, prof. of audiology and speech sciences at Purdue Univ., says the assault of noise on a person's hearing has a cumulative effect. "It may take 10 to 15 years for the hearing loss to be realized, and by then it's too late." Goldstein points out that hearing stress occurs when a person is subjected to too much sound. The person then may have what is called a temporary threshold shift in which his hearing is temporarily impaired. If he stays away from the noise, his hearing will come back, but eventually the problem may become permanent. A hearing aid can help, but full hearing will not be restored. Goldstein says the subtle signs of overexposure to noise are ringing in the ears that subsides and fuzziness or unclear sounds. To help prevent premature hearing loss due to noise pollution:

• Turn down your stereo, radio and T V.

• If possible, avoid places where the noise level is high.

• When buying products, such as vacuum cleaners and lawn mowers, select ones that are least noisy. Noise levels are listed on many products.

• If hearing tests reveal that you have early signs of noise-induced hearing loss, wear protective ear devices when subjected to loud sounds.

Higher Tar Cigarettes Lose Taste Exclusive.

Taste dominance of higher tar cigarettes challenged by MERIT breakthrough.

LOW TAR–'ENRICHED FLAVOR'

For years, you couldn't get real tobacco flavor without high tar. Low tar cigarettes just couldn't measure up. Until MERIT.

Until a breakthrough in tobacco science resulted in a way to boost tobacco flavor without the usual corresponding increase in tar. The result was 'Enriched Flavor'™ tobacco.

MERIT and MERIT 100's were packed with this special tobacco And taste-tested against a number of higher tar cigarettes.

Overall, smokers reported they liked the taste of both MERIT and MERIT 100's as much as the taste of the higher tar cigarettes tested.
